Tories' new challenge on trade union Bill could hasten election

Political Correspondent

Mr Whitelaw, the shadow minister employment, backed by other Conservatives, has tabled another amendment to the Trade Union and Labour Relations Bill, designed to retain a large part of the Indus trial Relations Act, which the Government wishes to repeal.

It seeks to retain three important sections of the Act to allow the Commission on Indusrrial Relations to continue to operate.

The commission's duty is to make reports on a variety of subjects affecting industrial relations, including the manoer in which employers and workrs are organized for collective bargaining; the disclosure of information by employers to their employees or trade union ighrs; and training in iodusrelations or collective

The amendment would involve the retention of four long clauses and 14 clauses in Schedule 3 of the Industrial Relations Act.

The Department of Employment said last night that the processor being a possible to the processor. the necessary legislation would be provided by en Employment Protection Sill "which it is hoped will be introduced later this year".

Before legislation the service will be run by e council comprising e chairman and nine members appointed by the Secretary of State for Employment. Three of the members will be nominated by the TUC and three by the CBI; the other three will be people considered to beve suitable experience of industrial relations.

The service will eventually take over the Department of Employment's conciliation and advisory roles, and will adopt the function of the Commission on Industrial Reletions to improve end extend voluntary collective bargaining in industry.

The consultative document says: "The service would be expected to act quickly, whether netionally or locally, to seek to avoid or end disputes. But it elone would decide whet action it thought appropriete to take—and the tactical timing".

Employment Secretary would have power to refer to ft "any matter on which ha wished to seek edvice end assistance" and would also be able to call for reports on major issues and disputes.

He would also retain the power to appoint committees or courts of inquiry, thus reserving for the Government the right to deel with serious labour disputes that cannut be solved by the new body. Conciliation will be under-taken by full-time professional staff, although the service will be free to call on people from eutside. Arbitration will be provided from a panel of people experienced in industrial relstions. Those involved in a dis-pute will normally be expected to agree in advance to accept the arbitrators' award, but the service will not insist on this as a precondition.

Oueen's Bench Division Drivers without seat belts should not have damages reduced

Smith and Another v Blackburn Before Mr Justice O'Connor added his voice to judicial dicta against the view that car drivers and passengers injured in road accidents should have their damages reduced merely because they were not wearing seat belts. His Lordship said that ordinary decency was offended by the idea that a grossly negligeot driver's insurers should should have their damages reduced merely because they were not wearing seat belts. His Lordship said that ordinary decency was offended by the idea that a grossly negligeot driver's insurers should be relieved from paying proper compensation when the injured person was doing nothing wrong.

Reserved judgment was being given awarding damages totalling £6,600, with interest and costs, to Mr Cyril Thomas Sunth and his Mr Cyril Thomas Smith and his wife, Mrs Charlotte Mary Smith, of Addlestone, Surrey, on their claim against the defendant, Mr Ernest Edward Blackburn, nf Alexandra Road, Croydom, in respect of injuries they sustained in an accident caused by his necligent driving at Rusbey Road fivorer in May, 1972, and consequent A-stay of execution-for 21-days

That was, technically, enough to dispose of the issue, but his Lordship wished to add his voice to what had been said on sear helts.
The accident occurred on a oneway road going up a rise to a creet.
Mr. Smith was driving his car absolutely normally, he was doing nothing at all wrong. Yet it was really suggested that be should bave foreseen that a madman would drive up the dyover in the wrong direction and at high speed, so that when he did meet somebody mind-ing his business, they collided bead

The law did not require a person The law did not require a person in Mr Smith's position to foresec that that kind of accident would occur. He might foresee that he might come on a broken down vehicle, or all sorts of things, but his Lordship saw no ground for assuming that the law required Mr Smith to foresee that kind of accident.

cautions against the possible event? cautions against the possible event?

In this country the issue was first raised on the topic whether moinr exclists ought to wear crash belmers. In O'Comtell v Jockson (11972) I QB 27th a motor cyclist sustained serious head injury in a collision in which he came off his machine. The trial judge refused to reduce the award of damages because the accident was held to be the fault of the other criver. The cause the accident was held to be the fault of the other driver. The Court of Appeal, however, said that the judge was mistaken, and failore to wear a crash helmet at the time of the accident did amount to failure to take proper care for one's own safety it one chose to ride a motor cycle.

lished that belts really provided safety to a greater degree than they might cause some types of injury. After O'Connell's case three of his Lordship's brethreo bad held that a fallure to wear belts did amount to contributory oegligeoce if it was established that wearing e would have reduced some of injury. Varying proportions damages bad been deducted, ranging from one-third down to 5 ranging from one-tund down to 5 per cent. The judges bad felt themselves bound by the principle in O'Connell to come to their conclusion (in Pasternack v Poulton [1973] 1 WLR 476: Pamell v Shlelds [1973] RTR 414, and McGee v Franck Shaw & Co Lul [1973] RTR 409). His Lordship did not feel hlm-self bound by O'Connell to come to any such conclusion where seat helts were concerned. A similar helts were coocerned. A similar view was taken by Mr Justice Shaw in Challoner a Williams (The Times, April 4), and his Lordship endorsed all that Mr Justice Shaw had said. It seemed to his Lordship that, if one took the facts of the present accident, the idea that the insurers of a grossly negligent driver should be relieved in any degree from paying what was proper comfrom paying what was proper com-pensation for injuries offended ordinary deceace. His Lordship would not so rule until forced to do so by higher authority.

There was only advisory caution about seat belts in the Highway Code (1948 ed., rule 23). His Lord-code 1348 cd. rule 23. He Lord-ship compared that rule with the advisory caution (in rule 1) not to walk close to the kerb, and he saked himself whether anybody would consider that a pedestrian so walking who was ruo down by a car which prove on lo the pavement should be held partly to hlame. Certainly there was noishing in the Highiray Code or the Road Traffic Act. 1972, which forced the Court to any such conclusion.

Even if his Lordship had concluded that a bell might have prevented some of the injury—which he had not—he would unhesitat-ingly have held that failure to wear ingly have ned that failure to their seat belts did not amount to con-tributory negligence calling for any reduction of damages, particularly in a case such as the present. # Bill gives councils greater power to protect ancient buildings

MR SHERSBY (Hilliogdon, Ux-

NR SHERSBY (Hilliogdon, Ux-bridge, C), moving the second reading of the Towo and Country Amenities Bill, said it was an en-vironmental Bill providing an opportunity for the House to con-sider the conservation of Britain's heritage, the enhancement of towns and villages, and the main-tenance of historic gardens. The Bill was a logical successor to the Civic Amenities Act which established the concept of conser-vation areas. The number of convation areas. The number of con-servation areas had increased and the powers and resources avail-able to local authorities to secure lence which has occurred when students have broken up meet-able to local authorities to secure their preservation and enhancement bad been extended.

Now it was necessary to go a step turther. Designation in itself the necessary administrative preliminary. The real object was rise preservation and enhancement of the character and appearance of that area which was by definition of architectural and historic interest.

The should take the upportunity The should take the opportunity

The Bill would bring demolition of oon-listed buildings in conservation areas within the scope of planning control. Some provision needed to be made to exclude either certain buildings or categories of building of the need to secure consent to demolition.

Powers were given to the Secre-lary of State for the Environment no make directions excluding spe-cific huldings or types of build-ing, but it was to be hoped that these powers would not need to be used. They were included only as a long-stop.

Efforts should be made to get a comprehensive, national list of architectural and historic treasures in their own settings by the end of the Europeao architectural year.

MR GRIMOND (Orkney and Shelland, L) said the Bill was a lurther step in the direction of taking the protection of good architecture out of the museum area. He hoped the Government would bave a word with the architectural associations and others because the whole provision of architecture needed examination. Most recant buildings were appallingly bad and architects did not seem to give much attention to developing methods of building and restoration which were reasonably economic.

MR CHARLES MORRIS, Minister of State Urban Affairs (Manchester, Openshaw, Lab), said his depart-ment would seek to take an active and helpful interest in the Bill as and helpful interest in the Bill as it proceeded through its Parliamentary stages.

The Government welcomed the provisions of the Bill which were designed to preserve, protect and enhance crucially important areas, it would not only benefit people living in the areas, but people trometics who wanted in enjoy ancient monuments and historical buildings.

Many mould regard the additional entrol over demontton as the most control over demolition as the most control over demolition as the most important part.

An outstanding and welcome development had been the growth of local and national amenity societies which had been invainable in fustering awareness of local areas.

Some local authorities had a good record on designating ennservation areas, and others were not so good. He hoped the Bill would encourage authorities to examine Their areas with great care for possible designations.

MR BISHOP (Newark, Lab) said the churches' main committee representing 27 denominations was concerned about some of the Bill's provisions. These were likely to have serious consequences for a church which owned any listed building. If brildings were compulsorily acquired the church authorities would receive only the existing use ralue without any compensation for development of Another provision meant that persons owning bullolings might be forced to keep unoccupied churches and church buildings in repair as their own copense even though these had ceased to have any value for their particular work. Churches were not in business to maintain listed buildings. MR RATHBONE (Lewes, C) said he welcomed the restrictions and regulations on the display of advertising material in conservation areas.

The Bill was particularly important in its application to the south-cast where, to a degree unmatched anywhere else, so many people had to rely on the country-side, the villages and towns, out-side the great conurbation of AMR COOKE (Bristol, West, C) said the Bill would be a considerable belp to preservation, conservation, and amenides societies both varion, and antennes societies both national and local. The question of local conservation sould touco more indimately the lives of many more indinately the fives of many more people than some of the great national questions. The saving of a single huilding of merit in a otherwise dull area could raise quality of future development.

Israel reprisal raids continue in Lebanon

Tel Aviv, May 17

The Israel armed forces today kept up their ettacks on alleged bases of Palestinian guerrillas in Lebenon. "Fatahland" in southern Lebanon was blasted by the Air Force while ground forces crossed the border during the night to blow up a house in Majdiye about half a mile inside Lebanon.

The bouse, said to have been a terrorist hideont, was not occupied but the Israelis said a search before the explosivee were laid revealed evidence that terrorists had been there. The Israelis also reported that the Matullah area was shelled early thie morning from Lebanese territory but there was no damage Shelling on the Syrian front also continued today.

Meanwhile, Dr. Kissinger, the American Secretary of State, arrived at 2.30 am from Damascus to continue his attempts to break the impasse over the separation of forces between Syria and Israel

Dr Kissinger said be was try-ing a new approach. A high American official observed that the impasse concerning the lines of disengagement was more emotional than geographical and said the parties were as close to an agreement as it was possible to get without actually signing one. Dr Kissinger met Israel Government leaders and an extraordinary Sabbath eve cabinet meeting was beld to die cuss developments. Dr Kissinger is expected to go to Damas-

-The campaign which William Wilberforce led against and established their own countries. One of these, the British slave trade lasted nearly 20 years before the Kingdom of Haiti, came to be ruled by Henri its triumph in 1807; the institution of slavery survived Christophe, a man of exceptional ambition and for another 27 years. The period in between was one imagination. Christophe and Wilberforce became of frustration for the abolitionists, but there was a correspondents, the King sometimes writing from his moment of great excitement. The Haitian slaves had impregnable citadel in the Haitian mountains, the risen during the French Revolution, massacred their philanthropist from his house at Kensington Gore on alave trade gained him maoy peculiar correspondents. At the same time es he was lobbying heads af atate, writing to the foremost political and literary figures of the world and sending a copy of his works for the Pope's perusal, he would also he corresponding with obscure missionaries, seamen and slave owners. But none of his correspondence was more colourful than his exchanges with Henri Christophe, the Emperor of Haiti, a nation which has never been distinguished for the prohity or administrative qualities of its rulers. From Dessalines to Papa Doc they have imposed a reign of terror on their wretched country. But during the last years of the French wars it seemed that Haiti had found io Henri Christophe a leader of true genius, under whom she might advance to the Black Renaissance of which the Abolitionists had dreamed for so

Henri Christophe was horn a slave in the British island of St Kitts, in spite of which he always retained an affection for his "native country". He served with distinction in the revolutionary and civil wars and once the turbulent forces of Haitian politics had thrown him job to recover he recovery to a server of the country of the coun pointes had thrown him loto power he promptly arranged to he crowned King. [Christophe was King of part of the old Freech colony of St Domingue. The other part, also ruled hy ex-slaves, was called the Haitian Republic.] Christophe was a mao of outstandiog ability and imagioation, with the objectivity to see his country's shortcomings and the confidence to tackle. them. He realized that Haiti could never be safe while the threat of reconquest by Fraoce huog over her. She remained huog over her. She remained poteotially the richest country in the New World and in the eyes of the Freoch she was a colony which had revolted and which, but for the British hlockade, would have been reconquered long ago. Napoleon had sent an expeditionary force under General Leclerc to sundue the Haitians during the Peace of Amiens. After initial successes Leclerc's army, decimated by yallow fever, harassed by the Blacks and cut off from France by the renewal of the war. by the renewal of the war, wisely surrendered to the British. The conventions at Paris and Vienna took no account of Haiti and left the French at liberty to attack her again when they wished. Christophe's relationship with the Republic of Haiti was also stormy and sometimes the two countries were at war. So long as these threats remained Christophe needed to keep up a large standing army, though this was aconomically damaging and politically dangerous. Recognition by the British would give Haiti a new security against such dangers.

Christophe saw Haiti's second The conventions at Paris and Wilherforce's fight against the hut Lancaster's methods were well suited to mass education where there could be few teachers. He claimed that "one mastar may conduct a school of mastar may conduct a school of 1,000 children with perfect ease " and achieved this by an ingenious system under which monitors played the part of assistant masters and lesson hoards were used. Lancastar taught Reading, Writing, Arithmetic and Needlework, and in forced discipline with savage hrutality he substituted humiliations for corporal punish-oteots. Christophe, so far as flogging was concerned, inclined more to the views of Dr Keate, but he adopted the rest of Lancaster's system. Tha first master, Thomas Gulliver, arrived in Haiti in September

> The first school excited every one by its success. In April 1817 Gulliver reported, " My scholars possess great abilities, they make rapid progress in the English language. It is now six months since I commenced to qualify some monitors and at present they are capable of teaching a class of 30 or 40 boys. . . . They have advaoced lo six months to the sixth and seventh classes, and go through the four first rules of arlthmetic In English with facility." The King inspected the school and expressed his satisfaction to Gulliver with the gift of a sheep and some coffee and sugar. By and some coffee and sugar. By Christophe also founded hospitals under the superinten-dence of his Scottish doctor, Duncan Stewart, which were thought to be as good as any in England. He tried agricultural experiments, giving his soldiers small grauts of land, and asking for English workmen to demon-strate the use of the plough. Schools for girls followed those for hoys.

These developments were followed with eager excitement. English abolitionists experienced the same feelings as liberals in France at the time of the American Revolution. Here in front of their eyes all their argu-ments were being justified, all their dreams fulfilled. An independent Negro state, peopled by those who had been slaves, but those who had been slaves, but anlightened and set upon improving itself, must acon hring the whole hideous edifice of slavery down in ruins. Sir Joseph Banks expressed his enthusiasm in a letter to Wilherforce: "Were I five and twenty as I was when I emharked with Captain Cook, I am very sure I should not lose a day in emharking for Haiti. To see a in emharking for Haiti. To see a set of human beings emerging Christophe saw Haiti's second need as education, without which she could never raise herself from the miserable state in which the French had left her. Here again he must turn to England, both hecause the most advanced educational pioneers were. English and hecause he could find in the abolitionists a group of men able and willing to help him. Christophe's reasoning ran on the same lines as his tutor for his son, and seven pro-fessors for a Royal College ne desires to found. Amongst these are a classical professor, a medical, a surgical, a mathematical, and a pharmaceutical chemist." The King asked him to six for a portrait and sent him one of himself and his son.

On November 18, 1816, Christophe wrote a long and friendly letter to Wilberforce. "Je suis peoctre mon cher Wilberforce, des sentiments généreux et philanthropiques que vous m'ex-primez, er je serais indigne da sa mild belabour any idler he Am. He was once taking an a bress merchant to task for when the Hairian regulations, I had youn muttered, "I wish The King a Charleston now doning his d'him, and abananyone know a never to let replied, "And hooke English, think I should ferich do you The first letter." The strophe sent Wilberforce "The task and wished Wilberforce The task anthropiques que Yous m'exprimez, et je serais indigne da l'amini pure que vous m'avez vouée, si je ne faisais tous mes efforts pour la mériter, en suivant les sages conseils que vous me donnez." The king said that he understood English perfectly and wished Wilberforce to write in that language. He expressed great satisfaction with the progress of the schools. The spreadgress of the schools. The spreading of raligion end morality would be more difficult in a country fresh from slavery and 20 years of revolutionary and civil wars, but he intended to see lengthy passage in which he praised the English national character as brave, loyal, philanthropic, religious and honest and denounced the French as degenerate, degraded, vile and false. He contrasted Louis XVIII's vaunted religion with syllis valued religion with bis authorization of plots to en-slave Haiti; he finished by begg-ing Wilberforce to consider the portrait he had sent as that of two of his most sincere friends. Wilberforce needed no such encouragement to spur on his efforts for Haiti. It was already too appealing a cause, but every letter he wrote to the King now contained some religious messige. On October 8, 1818, he sent off an immense letter, which must have nearly brought their bills for carrying charges level. Wilberforce had tried and failed to obtain some recognition of Haitiao independence from the meeting of the powers of Aix-la-Chapelle. He sent Clarkson as an emissary. "Clarkson seems formed by Providence for the purpose", he wrote in his diary. Clarkson was also acting directly by the religious to abolition. He

The slave's citadel: the castle built on La Ferrière is a testimonial to the genius of Henri Christophe, the slave who became king of Haiti. From it Christophe frequently wrote copious letters to William Wilberforce-the first of such weighed 85 ounces.

although he impressed Tsar Alexander by showing him let-Alexander by showing him let-ters of Christophe, he returned with no more than expressions of friendship. Nevertheless neither he nor Wilherforce thought the chances of a French invasion were very high. To-gether with this message of en-couragement he was able to tell Christophe into the Spanish had Christophe that the Spanish had joined with the Portuguese in abolishing the slave trade. He had great difficulty in finding suitable candidates for employment in Haiti. Apart from the services and missionaries he found that the "disinclination of men of good character to go abroad is very great unless they can find no way of maintaining themselves at home ". Religion aione, ne thought, could strengthen men to do their dury in the midst of temptations. He slipped easily into a discussion recommended the Protestant

"A great variety of little works," he continued, "have been published in this country of late years for the purpose of inculcating useful knowledge and good works. Many of these though professing to he intended for the use of young people, may be read with advantage by persons of any age." He sent out egreat number of these tracts for use in Christophe's new schools.
"A few copies of the different kinds that are very handsomely bound are intended for the use of your Majestra own family who may be inclined to read them, and I cannot but flatter myself that they will derive both pleasure and profit from the perusal." He also sent Christophe a copy of the British Encyclopaedia, "an excellent publication, in truth a library of itself." Dialogues on Political Economy and, to reinforce the King's Properture Leanings. Wilberforce had discussed with Stephen the dangers posed by Christophe's armies. Now that he was convinced that France did not intend to invade Haiti, he felt hound to pass on his views.

"I am aware, indeed", he wrote, "that hitherto your Majesty has been under the necessity of considering yournecessity of considering yourself to be ready to repel the sudden assault of an invading enemy; rather than as administering the concerns of a Kingdom at peace with all the world. This we know has rendered it necessary for you to be a nation of soldiers, but surely it cannot be but that you would have notice from your friends in this country if the French court should be infatuated enough to renew their attempt. . . I trust, therefore, that your Majesty may he able to allow your people to slide gradually into the various lines of civil industry, and get to keep them in a state in which keep them in a state in which they may be at any time able to come forward effectually for their own preservation, even more than for your Majesty's depended on the attitude of the House of Commons, where feel-ings against the African cause still ran high There was also much goodwill and generosity to be tapped and he asked Christophe for a resume of events in Heiti since 1790.... Of all the King's requirements the ploughmen proved the most difficult to fill. "The honest rustics and their apparatus", as he called them in a letter to Christophe, did not embark until the end of 1819, and then they left Wilberforce full of misgivings. He wrote to Macaulay on November 9.

"My heart quite fails me at the idea of sending these . . . raw creatures into so distant, and to them, so strange a clime, without preparing them more for what they have to expect. I began my note meaning to entreat you to talk with them, especially on what I did not mention, the moral, or rather immoral state of moral, or rather immoral state of society in Hairi. I desired them to confer with you about health, how to proceed on the first symptoms which you would state to them they ought to regard as indications of regard as indications of approaching sickness and how hest to take precautions against its attacks."

The ploughmen came to The ploughmen came to me harm but neither were their implements successful. One was sent to a place so rocky that it could be tilled as well by the Haitians' primitive implements as by the iron ploughs bought by Wilberforce. The other could not persuade the local farmers to abandon their old ways. Both soon returned to England.

Wilberforce's instincts above Wilberforce's instincts about the danger of keeping so great an army proved to be right, though he had only seen one sida of the King's character. He had exchanged letters with Christophe the visionary, the idealist and the philosopher, the King who was determined to King who was determined to prove his people the equals of any. He had had misgivings at times, as when he wrote to Thomas Harrison in September 1818. "I am truly concerned at reading in the papers passages which afford but too much reason to fear that Christophe is again about to renew hostilities against the Haytian Republic as it is called, it is some palliation that he probably is airaid of being attacked by the French on that quarter. Still where power has once been tasted one covers has once been tasted, one cannot help fearing the disposition to extend the means of gratification —nothing can be so ill judged, with a view to interesting the Public in his behalf against any attack that might be made on him by the French Government."

But he name these Christophe But he never knew Christophe the tyrant, or saw the means he used to drag his people into modern life. As time passed Christophe grew more violent, his demands increased and his rages became more frequent. In August 1820 he suffered a stroke

Garlic sausage is made with coarse cur ham and pork and, as its name implies, is fla-voured with garlic. If friends voured with garlic. If friends are likely to drop in for drinks, thinly sliced salami and garlic sausage are the thing to band around. They are much less troubla than biscuit canapes and far tastier. Mortadella is an Italian sausage with finely minced pork and bam and diced pork fat. It is flavoured with peppercorns and a little with peppercorns and a little garlic. chicken or cooked gammon.

Lachsschinken is one you might not he too familiar with. It is snoked pork loin wrapped in a thin layer of pork fat. It should be bought very thinly sliced and goes well with all other meats: it is also worth remembering that salami and lachsschinken make delicious cold meat sandwiches with crisp lettuce. Keep these continental sliced meats refrigerated. A selection of them can supplement your own cold cuts.

Get in plenty of salad vegeta-

Get in plenty of salad vegeta-bles and when considering what to huy, remember that one hot vegetable goes ideally with cold meats and salad. If you like, reserve this privilege for new boiled potatoes tossed in butter with chives, or for hot baked potatoes. Scrub potatoes for baking and while still damp roll in kitchen salt. This makes the outside deliciously crisp when baked. Serve with a topping of soured cream and chives.

Young French beans can be served as a salad or as a bot vegetable. I like them best in a dressing with cold meats. Top and tail and then simmer the beans for about 8 mioutes. Drain, and while warm toss in an oil and vinegar dressing. Serve cold. Select tomatses that are nice and firm for tomato salad. Allow 1 large tomato per person and slice across with your sharpest knife into 4in thick slices. Salt and pepper them and dress with oil and vinegar dressing. Sprinkle with chopped parsley, chives or spring onion including some of the green as well as the white stem. For gourmet freshness serve not more than 1 hour after slicing the tomatoes and adding the dressing. All salad dressing necessary can be made np in quantity and stored in the refrigerator ready for use. Remember that smoked foods keep well, like hacon or kippers for hreakfast or smoked haddock for a kedgeree.

Melons are a good buy for a long weekend; they keep per-fectly without spoiling. Store them somewhere cool like the mix with other fruits of your choice to make a fruit salad and serve in the melon shell.

The bidding may not commend itself to the purists, but South drew the correct deduction that his partner beld an innusually powerful hand with at least two aces when he raised the Clubs to Four, bypassing Three Nn Trumps.

West led the A and then played a small diamond. The declarer concluded that Westwould ba likely to defend in this way if he held the OK on which, after the opening lead, the slam appeared to depend. Ha decided that it was against the odds for him to find the OQ and obtain a discard on dummy's long heart; so with considerable hesitation be finessed the diamond and went finessed the diamond and went

I do not know the correct play when you are faced with an immediate decision whether to finesse in one or the other of two suits. But one conclusion is certain. If West, instead of switching to the diamond, had played another spade, declarer would have followed the golden rule of postponing the diamond finesse as long as possible. He would have discarded a diamond on the second spade, discovered the club position, and cashed the VK and VA on the chance that the VQ was unguarded in one of the two hands against hrm. The diamond finesse would then have been unnecessary.

In this instance it is unlikely that, baving established two tricks in spades for the declarer, West would deliberately lead a diamond from the &K when be could not he sure whether South's hidden band contained tricks in hearts or in diamonds.

West led the $9. Winning the trick declarer draws trumps, ducks a round of spades and takes the remainder. Whether East covers the OJ or allows ir to hold the trick seems immaterial to the result, for if the &J wins South can return to his band either with the OA or by overtaking tha #Q.

South found a curious way to gn down. The OJ was covered and be then made two unfortunate assumptions—that the trumps wera unlikely to be favourably divided and that East held a short diamond suit because be did not allow tha \J to win. Declarer decided to ruff a heart in dummy and to play on diamonds for a twelfth trick. After the VA and a ruff ha cashed the  $\Diamond Q$  and tried to It seems more logical, therereturn to his hand by ruffing a diamond with the  $\clubsuit 9$ . West overruffed and cashed a heart.

A towering Electra

Daunted—and never having seen the play performed nor heard it —I recorded the hroadcast intending to go through it, if at all, a bit at a time. However both playwright and production (by Martin Jenkins) had other ideas and ooce started, like the Ancient Mariner's audience of the could not achieve but one, I could not choose but listen

O'Neill compels acceptance of his treatment of the Oresteia with its expression of the working of fate in terms of the ideas of Freud and he does this partly, hy sheer size and determination, partly hecause the new appears to have been founded on the old, to have been founded on the old, not substituted for it: one hears. Aeschylus whispering behind him—or at least one does so in the first two plays of the trilogy. In the third and unlike Orestes. Orin finds no release from guilt; the old path and the new diverge and if in Aeschylus? diverge and if in Aeschylus's view a man ends np something more than human, in O'Neill's he ends up something less. The curious thing is that the first (and decidedly the more improbabla) outcome appears in some sense urner than the second despite the support the latter one receives from common experience of how desperate people heliave. Sarah Badel as Lavinia/Blectra had the burden of the acting and gave from beginning to end a commanding performance. She was spleodidly supported by Barbara lefford. Nigel Stock, John Turner, Peter Marinker anditionals his name was not fearned by Kerry Francis.

As far as Radio is concerned, Wednesday is drama day with plays morning, afterday with plays morning, after-noon and night. Even in a week without Electra, I thought last Wednesday's a series of misses, more or less near. In the morning David Wheeler's temptuous of ordinary horing guests, takes a number of well deserved knocks on the chin of his career. One can visualize the consequences—a second dinner of numble pie after the guests have gone home, but this was a play dominated by its situation—a neat device but short of interesting implicastort of interesting implica-tions, characters adequate hit not engaging, lines serviceable like a table knife, when they should have been like a razor-K. Allen Sadler's The Road (from Bristol) had more invention: Young executive and wife flee the rat race, the nicer, the nervous breakdown in favour of calm countryside, innocent rusticity. But the rustics think the fugitives are mad, abandooing a colour-supplement existence they have never yet managed to acquire, and they exploit the newconers naiveté and idealism to the hilt. The final blow comes when a slip road is projected from the nearby motorway which will fill the peaceful village streets with cars. Far from nhiecting, the locals want it for the husiness nervous breakdown in favour of

This week O'Neill's complete it will bring; like fish in water Mourning Becomes Electra has they have no idea of how nice it can be to be wet. The some nice ironic touches in the narration which was cast as if it were an extract from a work of sociology, but unfortunately such lightness was made up for by a hint of sermonizing in the lines in which the rustics set about disposing of the bucolic ahout disposing of the bucolic myth.

I had some expectation of Extra Terrestrial Objects by Ian Dougall whose curious The Immortal Young Ladies of Avignon, even if it backed body, gave promise of an original and talented writer for radio. This new play was about Wilfired Hamster who sees UFOs and claims to have invented an antigravity machine—later found under suspicious circumstances on the local rubbish dump. It contained a number of delightful touches—the dog who watches television, the water heater booby-trapped to prevent Mildred Hamster running in a bath and drowning all the ellevision will be supposed to prevent Mildred Hamster running in a bath and drowning all the in a bath and drowning all the silverfish. More of it next week. (Wednesday, 8.05; series title The Other Side of Beyond). Also next week what I dearly hope will be a radio event: the return of Don Haworth to radio drama with A Dansel and also a return of Don Haworth to radio drama with A Danusel and also a Rough Bird (R4, Monday), a return also—to quote Manchester's press handout—to that earlier Howarth style of "rom-hustious epic". I knew such returns to old successful styles do not necessarily offer any guarantees: of recent vears, however, Mr Haworth's characteristic hrand of exuberant pessimism lost something of the exuberance and gained in my view very lirtle in its place. If the Rossini Mass had been entirely forgotten, Beethoven's in C bas been sadly neglected in the concert hall, but not in the the concert hall, but not in the recording studio, where Beecham and, much more recently, Giulini have cogently championed it. Argo's new version, using a smaller and all malevoice choir, works predictably at a lower emotional level and is sung in a polished, keen manner thar does not always match up to the wock's deeper moments. Scale and maturity are missing from the performance, bur there is much to admire in its balance and in the more than adequate solo contributions. solo contributions.

Like Rossini, Mozart often inserted operatic sounds into his church music, like the exquisite, llia-like aria setting of "Er incarnatus est." in the C minor Mass, aung on HMV's new recording with skill and delicacy by Cotrubas. Although this work's disparate movements may not add up to an entirely satisnot add up to an entirely satisfying whole, each on its own is fying whole, each on its own is near a masterpiece, none nearer than the sombre eight part "Qui tollis" chorus and the fugal finale to the Gloria, both done with great breadth here under Leppard. Te Kanawa hlots ner usually clean copy book with some uncertain runs in two of the ensembles; but is fine in the "Laudanua". Not quite as rense as Davis's version for Philips, Leppard'a has compensating qualities of tonal and choral beauty.

Mefistofele and Faust, by Delacroix

Boito's only complete opera

this week Boito's Mefistofele bas been Decca's property. The complete recording with Siepi, Tebsldi and del Monaco has kept its place in the catalogue since 1959. And, presumably for the benefit of those who believe that Boito's only opera is an uneven work and not worth a full set of records. Decca bave issued two sets of highlights with differences o only opera is an uneven work and not worth a full set of records. Decca bave issued two sets of highlights with differing forces: Siepi and Tebaldi joined by di Stefaoo on one of them, and Gbiaurov with Branco Tagliavini on the other. Bur if there is agreement over the nuevenness of Mejistofele there is rather less accord on just what should be left in; with the exception of one track both the highlights records go for different sections of the opera.

Neither of these patchwork quits offers serious competition to EMP's new Mefistofele, which bas grown from the New York City Opera's production. Here as there Norman Treigle aings the title role and Julius Rudel is the conductor. But the cast has been fattened by bringing in Caballe as Margherita and Domingo as Faust; the recording was made in Londoo and the LSO is the orchestra. The combination is a power-ful one, atrong enough to convince for at least part of the time that Mefistofele is an opera which works. It may sprawl in a way which makes Forza look positively tidy, and Bnito protests too loud and roo long. But the music is singable. Domingo in particular is in his controller is a particular in the protest of the particular is a particular in the particular in the particular is a particular in the particular in the particular is a particular in the pa in his most winning voice and pushes all his rival Fausts on eloquence and softness which makes del Monaco sound crude; he also gives Margherita scrious attention in the Garden Scene. Caballe takes a little time to warm no here and gives the impression, perhaps justifiably, that Margherita is an unrewarding role until L'altra notte " arrives. When it does come all the Caballe delicacy is awitched on and, as in the case of Domingo, the Decca rival, Tebaldi, is eclipsed. I was also impressed by a new

of his favourite roles. Treigle equally powerful on record but is more mannered and teods to rasp a little. I still have affection for Tullio Serafin's bandling of the score and most particularly for the way he cherishes the softer moments, such as the heginning of the Garden Scene, in the midst of the bombast. Rudel and midst of the bombast. Rudel and the LSO are more fiery, more brilliant and they are well supported by EMI's engineers, who have clearly had a lot of fun joining in with Mefistofeles's party tricks. In the end this new Mefistofele gets the vote by a fairly substantial margin, although it is worth noting that the Decca version is now available on cheap label.

No company has been mote

No company has been more active in opera so far this year than RCA; who in addition to building up their Italian reperrory bave been issuing one or two curiosities. Sanson et presumably it was for ber than the operation was mounted. Ludwig banishes memories of a dozen blowsy Dalilas and offers in their place a portrayal of great sensuality. There is a vibrancy in "Printemps qui commence" which shows off the great Lieder singer, while in Mon coeur souvre she gradually but surely eovelops Samson with ber song and thence into ber clutches.

James King as the strong man

James King as the strong man of Gaza is never going to be a match for ber. The voice tends to dry out as it moves upwards and there is not the required power for the final scene, although the prison aria. Vois mamisère is touchingly done. Scarcely anyone matters ourside the title pair, but Bernd Weikl, despite poor French, has bis moments as the High Priest. Giuseppe Parane keeps the Bavariao Radio Orchestra play. Bavariao Radio Orchestra playing crisply, but the recording quality lacks sheen and the volume bas to be kept well up. Act II is the one to listen to, and Act II is the one to listen to, and perhaps RCA might consider releasing it as a single record in due course.

The little F major sonata, Op. 10, No. 2, emerges more due courses.

A true rarry, or rather two rarities, come from the same company to the shape of Puccioi's Le l'illi supported by the second act of Edgar. In neither opera was Puccini writing with much conviction, and faced with librarit hefore him he could libretti before him he could scarcely he blamed. This RCA issue of two records, modestly priced and with the text printed on the inside of the aloum, has few pretensions. Barry Morell sings the two tenor roles with open tones and not much colour; Adriana Maliponte tackles Anna in Le Villi with much style than Nancy Stokes brings to Tigrana in Edgar. The Vienna Volksoper Orchestra under Anton Guadperverse. Certainly thera is not the idiomatic singing that Gorrand Vickers produced for EMI 10 years ago. But for those pre-

When, eventually, some record company decides to market a box called "Your 100 best string quartets" (not so unlikely if DGG can issue "Karlheinz Stockousen's Greatest Hits") they will have to include at least one oy Dmirri Shostakovich. He is now a senior composer, nearing 70, and e reactionary one by modern standards. Twenty years ago he was considered only just a distinguished writer of string quartets, though an outstanding symphonist. He han 10 symphonist to his credit, at least four or them very fine, but only five quartets of which the latest was the only undoubted master-piece.

By now Shostakovich has notched up 15 symphonies and 14 string quartets—if east west musical communication were speedier, we might know of more. The later string quartets have come to match the symphonies for aheer musical quality and variety of invention, and the issue of a hox containing the first 12 Shormhouigh string. first 13 Shostakovich string quarters, in exemplary interpretations by the Borodin Quarter, will be obligatory huying for anybody devoted to this musical medium. Shostakovich belongs to the great Haydon belongs to the great Haydn-Beethoven-Bartók tradition. They were all innovators: he is not, unless quietly and in-waroly, since his quartets are highly personal; for all that one may note the occasional nod of respect to Beethoven or Tchai-

With the third quartet Shostakovich's mastery of string quartet textures is strongly in evidence, as is bis personal con-trast inf concollance and melancholy sensibility, most poignantly expressed in the seventh and eleventh quarrets (both of these are "memorial" works, one to his first wife, the works, one to his first wife, the other to the leader of the Beethoven Quartet). It is to the third quartet too that we first encounter Shostakevich's involvement with the further possibilities of Beethoven's latequartet language, "Aluss essein" reinvestigated — valuably so, as is heard in those memorial works and in the latest pair, Nos 12 and 13, two magnificent pieces which, incidentally, play tonally with 12-note ideas.

Several of the quartets bave thematic or poetic links with thematic or poetic links with more or less contemporary other works by Shostakovich: the teath symphony in No 5, the first violin concerto in No 7, a number of works in No 8 (perhaps the saddest and most private of all 1. The later ones are not all melancholy; the Petrushka instinct is strong in Shostakovich—he does not forget his deot to Haydn.

It always strikes me as surpris-ing that, while there seem to be few if any string quartets these days who can bring the requisite intensity to the late Beethoven quarters, there is still a good handful of pianists capable of rising to the beights of the scarcely less demanding late sonatas. Of these the least austere, the most naturally and unashamedly expressive must surely be Rudolf Serkin.

Many pianista seem to feel that the scale of these sonatas demands restraint, intellectualism, even severity. Not so Ser-kin: his reading of Op 110 has an expressive spontaneity which does not preclude breadth of view. Thus the first movement starts almost dreamily, as if in quiet contemplation; as tha music tautens so does the play-ing, relaxing a little for the fall-firm grip at the first forte mark-iog, growing more masculine and purposeful: and this draws the music strongly together. The ensuing music, including the start of the recapitulation, is done broadly and with rich, singing tone, and the interlude in far off E major is played almost mystically, as if conveying its distance from the sonata's main line of thought. The ending is quiet and rapt.

Serkin gives a stormy and tense account of the scherzo, very distinct in its articulation. The recitative-like opening of the Adagio seems, in his elo-quent playing, almost to be struggling for verbal expres-sion; and the atioso itself is sion; and the atloso itself is amply sung, extraordinarily rich and open-bearted in feeling. The fugue is handled rather like the first movement, gentle and rapr at first, drawn tighter later on. Then everything is seen larger the second time—the arioso still more intense, the invarted fugue again calm but with a buga crescendo of intensity, and a crowning, beatific climax of sunlight on the final page.

Op 101 bas an equally penetrating performance, but its issues are not so towering. There is the same singing tone and openness of fealing, plenty of incisiveness, and a sense of the wry, epigrammatic nature of much of this sonata's invention. There are in both aonatas Serkin's usual faults: unevennesses, failures to synchronize chords, incidental nuises-and coupled to them. on my copy, is a disturbing piano "vibrato". But all these (the ing-octage theme but taking a last excepted) are bound up with the grandenr and personality of his interpretation. Casals and Serkin have of course heen much associated; a record I vividly remember couples them in Beethoven Op 69 and Op 102 No 2 sonatas. While that remains in limbo it seems curious in issue as a Casals memorial this new disc, made during a concert at the United Nations in 1958. The piano trin receives a quiet, coocentrated interpretation, not without inte-nation slips and the like; its coupling is Casals's performance of the early horn aonata, Op 17, much of it played, alas, in a style apter to Op 117 (at the earliest). A record not without interest. nor (I hasten to add) without perceptive prosic-making: but the interest resides chiafly in hearing something of a very great player.

The Brahms quinters are ranties in the concert hall; but this is the third available record offering a coupling of them. The playing of the Budapest Quartet and Trampler is direct and idiomatic, though one might imagine a richer individual string tone and a warmer, freer manner. Of the two works the later one, in G major, which is the bolder and mora forceful, is played with the mora spirit; the glow of the F major is not quite so persuasirely caught.

Only two of the six "Haydn flute quartets", and only one of the four bere, are certainly authentic; the authenticated viece is longer and more inven tive than the others: Yet all are tuneful, adept little pieces, written with a touch of humour that is Haydnish even if not Haydn's when this divertimento-like stylwas so standardized it scarcely matters what name the com-poser hore. The playing of these iennese musicians is suitably

What anyway, is true quartet at this riate? These divertimento-like pieces are good enough fun and some times a bit more than that in their Adagios: I think of the succulent little nne in Op 1 4 with its charming imitations the warm cantilena in that no Op 2. 1. the expressive intensity of the one in Op 2/6. The Aeo lian play richly out with sivile (except where they jolly the minuets along too much) and are excellently recorded.

In search of good old roast beef

Foreign tourists, lured to these shores by posters depicting Beefeaters, are often puzzled to find the roast beef of old England so hard to track down. Italian, Cantonese or Graeco- though the Yorkshira pudding French restaurants abound in is batter than the roast potatoes Loudon but establishments for John Bull are few and far between. One reason—aside from the cost of the beef—must be the dearth of native-bred cooks, waiters and managers. Even at Simpsons-in-the-Strand, that last bastion of Imperial eating, many of the waiters are now no longer English and many customers agree that the service is not what it was. It is bad enough being bundled unceremoniously out of the Men Only dining room, but one woman visitor to the npstairs restaurant was reduced to fury when she was then served a small portion of saddla of mutton and kept waiting for twenty minutes whila the carver decided if aha rated a second helping.

True, the roast beef is almost True, the roast beef is almost always excellent, tender and pink, and the roast duck that also arrives on the trolley has been warmly praised. But there have been hitter complaints about the siza and quality of the first courses and the vegetables are too often English in tables are too often English in the worst sense—institutional cabbage, tired roast potatoes and very sad Yorkshire pudding. and very sad Yorkshire pudding.

Opposite Simpson's within easy reach of the City lunch trade, is the Strand Palace Hotel Carvery. Here the self-served main course is the chief attracmain course is the times attract your own meat and fill your plata as many times as your conscience and the rather blunt carving knives allow. Not sur-prisingly, a queue of footsore tourists and treated schoolboys often forms in froot of the large wooden cider press which sup-plies the local colour. The allin price of £2.35 for three in price of 12.55 for infectiouses and coffee gives you a choice of roast leg of lamb, leg of pork or rib of beef either rare, medium or well-done. That beef and pork are tender and moist, though not quite as fullflavoured as they look (are they, perhaps, steam cooked before being roast?) But the lamb is excellent and there is no

The first courses are uninspiring but the chocolate torte and unfortu-nately named Meringue Fayre are surprisingly good. Drinkable carafe wine is £1.26.

A transatlantic version of the British roast can be found in the Carlton Tower's Rib Room. When the Rib Room was opened much was made of the authenticity of the food, though now, after many years of catering for overseas visitors, the menu has become more cosmopolitan. However, roast beef and rack of lamb still linger among the coq au vin and eggs benedictine, and the roast rib of Aberdeen Angus is indeed an impressive hunk of meat, both tender and tasty. It meat, both tender and tasty. It is served in one thick slice with an adequate Yorkshire pudding, watercress and a haked potato served. American style, with sour cream. In the evening this dish costs £2.55, but the table d'bôte lunch which includes a slightly smaller belping of beef, is £2.35. The rack of lamb, though well cooked and served. though well cooked and served, was roasted with herbs in a style more Mediterranean than English, and the proffered mint sauce would have formed an un-

It is probably wisest to concentrate on the main course at the Rib Room. Neither first courses nor sweets are particularly inspiring and a traditional sounding "apple pie (cheese extra) 45p" turned out to be cold and stale-tasting. The French raspberry sorbet is better. Back to the ueighbourhood of the Strand, where Rules of Maiden Lane has a pedigrea going back to 1798 and a menu at least half native. Some visitors have praised the grouse pie, now £1.45, but the grouse is often underbung and the pie is not improved by being carted round on a hooded silver trolley (the pastry gets leaden). You might be better off with the jugged hare or with the homelier daily specialities which include braised oxtail and boiled silverside with carrots and dumplings. The trifle Chantilly is "the standard mix-ture of soggy cake, commercial jam and custard, and piped cream" but the apple and blackcream" but the apple and black-currant pie has a pleasantly sharp filling. The service rums the gamut from welcoming through inattentive to alarming; one inspector was surprised to see a water who seemed to occupy a senior position in the hierarchy help himself to some beef off the trolley and eat it with his fingers. A more recent venture is Busby's in Chelsea where they offer such resolutely homegrown specialities as soused herring, stuffed pork and steak and kidney pudding on a set menn reasonably priced at £1.50.

The ubiquitous roast beef and Yorkshire yielded two large thick slices of moist beef, pink thick slices of moist beef, pink at the centre, but a pudding that was pallid without and windy within. Homely vegetables are fresh and the dish is left on the table, but there is the usual trouble with soggy roast potatoes. For once, the trifle is made with fresh fruit and plenty of sherry and cream. The only foreign touch at Busby's is the service, with Spaniards sporting open shirts over hairy chests, just like the Costa Brava. Costa Brava.

Tradition links Dick Turpin with dark doings on Hampstead Heath, and presumably inspired tha name of Turpin's Restauration of Turpin's Restauratio ant. Visitors to this pretty Georgian house need not fear highway robhery although the mignway roonery attnough the main dishes are now around the £1.50 mark. One of the proprietors is Danish which explains the otherwise puzzling "homemade Danish patte". His partner Mr Watte contributes the ner, Mr Watts, contributes the roast beef for every Sunday lunch and the less obviously native items like the roast duck with watercress and pistachio with watercress and pistachio sauce (good, but not much trace of pistachio). Try the cold cucumber soup, refreshingly piquaot and flavoured with dill, a better choice than the rather dull chestnut soup. But beware dull chestnut soup described here dull chestnut soup. But beware of the temptingly described best end of neck in ginger and apricot sauce. "The meat was served with e sweetish white sauce made with powdered ginger and one solitary cold tinned apricot." Some other dishes show some of chest care. dishes show signs of short cuts too, but you should be safe with the salmon trout with hot cucumber sauce and most peopla would like the turkey and arrichoke or duck and cherry pies. The dark rye bread from the Polish baker down the road is a good touch cooked even though they arrive on the plate. Among the sweets almond Menchikoff is praised and the meringues with cream and brandy are good, if exces-sively alcoholic, There is a short wine list, well set out, with three Rhones wines at £1.85. It seems reasonable to expec

Up the bean pole

Once more the Chelsea flower show comes round, with a private view for fellows of the Royal Horticultural Society on Tuesday, and public viewing on Weduesday, Thursday and Friday. Anyone wishing to become a fellow and thus gain admission to the private view. and to enjoy the other privileges of fellowship may join the Society on Tuesday at either of the entrance gates. The cold spring has helped some exhibitors by holding back some plants, but hindered others who have had difficulties in pushing thems along. But no doubt, as always, the growers will have overcome these problems.

In many places it is becoming more difficult to obtain pea-sticks, bean poles, and other staking materials. For some years we have grown runner beans up wires or strings attached to the top of a six foot pole, and tied to pegs made of a loop of bent wire pushed into the ground. Wa put about 10 bean plants in a carcle within a radius of about two feet around the pole.

When I first received which I first received sample metal bean pole with June. They will turn yellow at their plastic-covered wires for give exceedingly poor result than plastic-covered wires for so keep the young plants in the beans to climb, I thought it unlikely they would, because one year I offered them new shiny bamboo canes which they did not seem to be able to grasp. Howaver, the stems twisted around these thin wires quite happily.

It is worth browsing around your local garden shop or garden ceutre as there are now various ingenious plant sup-ports available. Plastic netting or plastic-covered wire mesh penels are useful for supporting different types of plant, and many amateur and commercial growers support their outdoor chrysanthemums by means of sin square mesh pig-wire panels. These may be seen in use at the chrysanthemum trials in the Royal Horricalural Society's Wisley garden. Stout split chestnut stakes are driven in one at each corner of the panel sloping slightly outwards. The flowers are planted in alternate squares, and as they grow the wire penel is simply raised up the stakes. No tying not yat available—that the a strictly transatiantic person I ting the same happy kick out of seeing the Royal Ballet shine so brightly in New York as I will when New York City Ballet pays its next, and inordinately belatad, visit to Covent Garden. I enjoyed sharing my frieods Forgetting the indifferent qualities of Manon as a spectacle, it was gloriously danced. Sthley looked like the deliquescence of a courresan, Dowell, remote in his passion but a Donatello in his classicism, and Wall, earthy, brilliant and Shakespearean, carried a very poor vehicle oo their back. (The music! in America you can almost be impeached for less. Where was Covent Gardeo's music committee wheo someooe wanted them?, What would Constant Lambert have thought? Also at last Georgiadis shares something with that other famous Greek-he occasionally oods.

But the real first night came three days after the Manon premiere. And it came, surpriseoough, with Swan Lake. It came with Merle Park making ber New York debut as Odette/Odile, and with Nureyev, purting aside his Canadian caper, and entering into his natural kingdom with the Royal Ballet.

Io New York we always view Nureyev as a member of tha Royal Ballet, which is defensibly a more sensible way of viewing him than that taken by the Royal Ballet management in Londoo.

By mischance I had never seen this current production of Swan Lake. It is all but perfect (and even the " but" is fundamentally a critical safeguard). The ressighly regrettable, mistake to toration of the Petipa/Ivanov ppen the Royal Ballet season choreography after the modish Kenneth MacMillan's monstrosities of the Royal Bal-Manon. The dancing-particu- ler's forgiven but not forgotten come. It has also been staged in accordance with contemporary Valois misunderstood us and invited Sir Robert Helpmann to stage his extravaganza, which should always have been put on ice, and now luckily has been.

But not all has been lost even with the Helpmann moostrosity. The great Ashton pas de quatre (which history may decide justi-fied all our suffering) has been put in its proper musical context in act three, and, of course, the Petipa pas de trois is hack in act nie. I have a possibly perverse preference for Ashton's pas de six version of waitz over his present ensemble. It might be given another try—it had more clarity and, in this ambiance, style. The Ivanov last act bas been restored and Sir Fred's magnifi-Ivanov had to come back, but I still want to see the Asbron. It should be staged as a separate ballet in practice dress—the suicide must go—and made into an abstract elegy. It could be called An Elegy for Swans. In any event it should not be lost. Very little of Ashton should be lost. We have posterity to account to.

This Swan Lake does need a new decor. I would like to see the restoration of the Mazurka, and the third act needs altogether more consideration. Benno should be restored to dance the pas de trois (no Benno in the second act, of course) and perhaps to act as a Horatio in the ballroom scene. The apotheosis needs restaging, and, if they are properly handled, I like the idea of dummy swans floating across the lake. It reminds the andience of the real surrealistic story. These are small points, almost everything is fine.

It is a curious thing, but, as everyone knows, the Royal Ballet dances better in New York than in London. No nue disputes that point. || have a feeling that City Ballet may dance better in London titan New York-but there have been regrenably few apportunities to put that to the test.) But these performances of a series of Swan Loke were almost unbelievable.

The Corps oe Baile: was strung on a heart beat. Its lines were impeccable, it moved with the surge of the music, it per-formed as one. Yet there was never any robot mechanism here. It was a school of poets singing in unison. The individuals were always good and often fantastic. In the pas de trois, for example, Michael Coleman was a smiling Vestris, whareas Wayne Sleep brought it a disconcerning, but enchanting, Grimaldi touch (Sleep is a true Sedler's Wells dancer and a spiritual son of Helpmann), yei both swept the air and the audi-

But it was the company that really impressed. Over the rears, since that idiotic dream in 1931, the company has got other and better. It is now so good that when it is at its best, simply as dancers dancing well-staged classics, it has no equal in the world.

liacMillan has disappointed rce as a creator lin particular he has tried to dominate the repertory too much! but it is his ultimate responsibility for the way the company is dancing. And, both as a group, and as individuals, it is dancing better than it has ever done

Cruising is buoyant

Amid the gloom and despond-ency that generally entircles the travel trade, the gentlest glimmer of optimism emanates from the shipping companies. Optimism about the number of cruise passengers, rather than profitability. I hasten to add. All the indications are that business is picking up, though profits are likely to be margioal.

Between them, the cruise companies carried some 150,000 passengers in 1973 and have made available 180,000 herths for this year's customers—a modest jocrease in keeping with the reduced circumstances of the boliday industry.
"Considering the bad way tour operators are doing, it is surprising to find cruise ships sailing almost full?, Mr Joho Laccaster-Smith told me recently. A director of Oceao Travel Development, formed to promote the idea of travel and promote the idea of travel and holidays oo ships, he is nonetheless a realist in regard to the uncertainties of the present situation. "At the moment, however, despite all our problems, the demand for cruising is huoyant", he told Apparently we are not keeping to our old habit of booking cruises well in advance. Although this trend is causing shipping linas a certain anxiety, it is unlikely to alter for some time, if at all. A small indication of the change is that one P & O cruise to the West Iodies last month received 90 bookings in the fioal week before departure.

But will the shipping companies make any money, even with this prospect of bealthily full ships "As they haven't passed on the full effects of the increased price of fuel oil, I don't think there's much hope for any shipping company to make a profit this year", admits John Lancaster-Smith. "I think they may if they'ra lucky hreak even."

So what? you may ask, reaching for the cruise brochures. That's a problem for the shipping companies, not for their passengers. I venture to suggest that it will affect passuggest hat it will alter pas-sengers before very long, for cruise fares must rise. As Mr Brian Shaw, chairman of Shaw Savill said a few days ago in Southampton: "It is absolutely vital for operators to agree that fares must be raised substan-tially to levels appropriate to the latest operating costs. Only in this way can we give our-selves even a chance of earning an acceptable return on our investment, and justifying any faith we have in cruising as a potentially profitable business." I would not normally concern this column with the financial ramifications of shipping companies (or airlines or tour com-panies come to that), but it is quite clear that we are all buy, whether those holidays are my ships or ashore.

As Brian Shaw pot it in his Southampton speech: "Cruising is a business which has largely risen from the ashes of dead or dying passenger liner trades. It is essential that we trades. It is essential that we should see a rapid end to the painful period of transition and that cruising should emerge as a husiness in its own right, and that owners should employ only the right ships for the new job." Turning back to the immedi-

Turning back to the immediate prospects—or, rather, wbat the autumn is likely to hring—it seems that the last minute bookers could be in for disappointment. The trend towards holidays in Britain, widely acknowledged and evideoced, is likely to increase the prosperity of those, such as botel owners, who are involved in it. They will coosequeously bave mooey to spare for their hy-now-traditional cruising holidays at the tail end of the days at the tail end of the season and after. It is, therefore, an ill wind that does not scatter some advantages. Speaking of advantages, the obvious ooes on a cruise are that you have oo worry about the value of the pound against a foreign currency—as loog as you are on board a Britishowned or operated vessel. No demands for currency surcharges and, of course, shipboard prices at duty free levels and io sterling.

Looking at the cruises available in September, October and early November—berths for which are still in good supply—
I thought to select random examples for your coosidera-Speaking of advantages, the examples for your coosidera-tion. Oriana of P & O, sailing from Snothampton on a two-week trip into the Mediterra-oean, on September 22, came to mind. So did Shaw Savill's Northern Star and Unioo Cas-tle's Reina del Mar both of which leave Southamptoo on October 5 for Mediterranean destinations.

But the cruising possibilities are so extensive, what with direct sailings, fly-cruise arrangements and so on, that the hest thing I can suggest is the investment of 15 peoce in a "Cruises and Sea Voyages" booklet, which has just been produced and can he obtained from travel agencies. It lists cruises by date and duration, ports of call and hasic fares. No consideration of the aurumn cruise scene would be complete, however, without reference to something rather special that happens oo September 19. That is when the Norwegian America liner Sagafjord begins her series of cruises out Soothampton Invidious though it may he to select one ship out of so many, I do so because she promises to bring to the present-day cruising scene a style that has for too long been absent.

"Possibly tha most expensive cruises in Europe", her owners admit, but there is no question that Sagafjord will attract to her long voyages those who recall the way it used to be on luxury liners. The average rate works our around £70 a day but Sagafjord has been described hy those who know the husiness going to have to pay consider-ably more for the holidays we ger ship in the world. Coloci-dentally, she happens to he in Southampton today on a cruise from New York which has Torquay, Plymouth, Oban and Douglas as United Kingdom ports of call.

of success.

There will always be a demand for top quality cruises. "You get what you pay for " is as true in regard to hulidays at sea as it is with any other commodity and there is plenty of evidence to show that passengers are prepared to pay more for high standards. As the sbipping companies in general prepare to hoist fares, they may be agreeably surprised at the loyalty of discerning passengers who have, over the years, come to know their ships. In line with this trend, the two main tour company-cruise operators—Clarksons with Delphi and Thomsons with A crew of 300 to serve 450 ship—the statistics tell their own story and I, for one, helieve it will prove to be a story of success seems that everyone has at last realized that a cruise is not a salt water version of a package boliday that can be sold by the same methods and to the same sort of customers. When the economics bave been put right and the old "style" allowed to return, the shipping Companies and we, the passengers, should get a better deal all round.

A batting machine they called 'The Croucher'

At one end stocky Jessop frowns, The buman catapult

Who wrecks the roofs of distant towns When set in his assault ".

When set in his assault "So wrote an American rhymester in 1897, when G. L. Jessop, a young man scarcely over the threshold of his career, was playing in Philadelphia. "The humen catapult" was a fine hyperbole. The way Jessop sprana at the hall, the momant the bowler had released it, is what these who saw him most vividly those who saw him most vividly

English cricket bas bad bigger English cricket has bad bigger bitters than Jessop (he did not try for specially long bits: the boundary was good enough). English cricket has bad batsmen who scored more runs with e bigher average. But there has never been an English batsman who hit so hard, and scored so fast, and yet still scored runs so consistently. In his career, which consistently. In bis career, which lasted from 1894 to 1914, Jessop scored 26,698 runs, ar an average of 32.63, and if one believes all one bears—those in Gloucester-shire who remember him never tire of talking about him—bardly played a defensive stroke. Sbortly before Roy Webber died, be wes talking to me about some stanstical investigations he bad been making to Jessop's career. Jessop scored 53 centuries in first-class cricket, with a highest score of 286, and so far as Roy had been able to dis-cover, he bad never batted for more than three bours. I don't know if Roy bad time to con-firm this, but it is an astonishing thought. Take into account your different social climate, your changed over rate, your nege-tive bowling tactics: take into account anything you like, but to score all those runs and all those centuries, and not to bat and throughout his career be had a reputation for being one of the world's best covers fields-men. A. C. MacLaren, recalled to the England captaincy in 1909 demanded before the series be-gan thet Jessop should be picked for every Test, "because he will run Victor Trumper out for me". This plan did not work Tor me.". In plan did not work arther the contrary, for Jessop strained bis back while fielding in the third Test, and never played for England again—but is is a remarkable example of the value placed upon his fielding.

I felt I glimpsed a little of G. L. Jessop once, when I saw his son, the Rev G. L. O. Jessop, score a fast 80 or so for Dorset against Cornwall at Camborne. G. L. O. Jessop was then middle aged himself, but a beautiful striker of the ball. He used the sweep a lot, as his father is said most daring circumstances, but be also bad a splendid straight drive back over the bowler's

C. B. Fry always insisted that Jessop was not "e slogger", which used to be a pejorative term, but e true batsman wbo took risks, who stretched his technique to the limit, sometimes attemping more than he could achieve; but was nevertheless basically a sound player. That innings by G. L. O. Jessop, though be bas never sought to compare his merits with those of his father, gave me a fairly clear idea of what Fry meant. In Test cricket, it must be said, Jessop's record was disap-pointing. Although he was usually picked when be was available, over a period of ten years, he scored only 569 runs in 1g matches, at an average of

Nevertheless, Jassop did win a Test, the famous one against Australia in 1902, when he re-deemed a forlorn English cause in the last innings, scoring 104, in the last inmogs, storing 10%, his only Test century, in 75 minutes. The philosophy behind picking bim must always bave been, "Ah! But wbatever hie average, be'a the kind of man who can swing a match", and that was an occasion when ho

The number of rimes he did it for other sides, and particularly Gloucestershire, it would be a labour to count. He came to the Gloucestershire ceptaincy soon after the departure of W. G. arrer the departure of w. G. Grace. Grace bad left amid a large and loud rumpus, and Jessoy's task was not an easy one. But although be was unable to lead the side to the championship, which was berdly surprising with the resources at the disposal be kert up the his disposal, be kept up the gates and the spirir of Gloucestershire as much by bis own marvellous example as anything else, and today his name is spoken of in the county in the same breath as those of Grace and of Hammond.

He was nicknamed "The roucher". He bent low at the wicket, and sometimes would stoop down so far that his cap was on the level of the bails. He said thar this beloed him ro judge the length of a ball aarly. It must bave added considerably to the psychological and drama-tic effects of his sudden spring, his pounce, his leap at the ball. But in leter life, at least, be disliked the name.

About 1948, when I was e junior producer on tha staff of the BBC, I was sent a capital script ebout Jessop, by Harold Gardiner, called "Tha Croucher". We put the programme into production, and gramme into production, and billed it in the Radio Times. As a matter of courtesy, we sent a script to Jessop, though, as it was an almost entirely laudatory script, we bardly thought be would complain. But be did. He complained most sharply, par-ticularly about tha title: indeed, it took all the tact of Frank Gillard to calm bim down, end the programme was postponed, to be broadcast et a later date tankerous moments, but this incident has always baffled me. Did be resent the nickname becausa it was put upon him by the press? He did a good deal time and another. Did he resent it because the Gloncostershire public relished it?

Ameteurs in those days were inclined to disregard public esteem, but he must have been proud of the affection in which Gloucestershire held him (he was born and brought up ar Cheltenbam), and it is as "The Croncher"—the great cat about to jump—that be is still bappily and proudly remembered.

Why the Pankhursts cannot take all the credit for votes for women

The unsung heroines of woman suffrage

"Excitement, drama and danger were the conditions in which her temperament found full scope," wrote Mrs Pethick Lawrence of the suffragette leader, Mrs Pankhurst Of all the crusaders born in the Victorian era. Mrs Pankhurst was the most alive to the importance of capturing the media. So it is appropriate that BBC television's six waekly programmes entitled Shoulder to Shoulder, which ended last weak, successfully captured tha colour and the tragedy, the defiant flamboyance and stylish gaiaty which were never absant from her extraordinary move-1 do not think that the history of the suffragertes has ever been satisfactorily written,

Yer when viewed from a historian's perspective, the BBC programmes were remarkably successful and deserve further dis-

The suffragette movement is of course a gift of a subject. Ir abounds in contrasts, and these the producers developed to the full: contrasts between rich and poor, East End and West End, London and Paris, drawing rooms and dungeons, politicians and protestors. Above all, there were contrasts between peraonalitios—most notably the sisters Christabel and Sylvia Pank-burst, whose mutual jealousy pervaded all six programmes. Mrs Pankhurst displayed all the zest for life, all the sudden storms and deep affections contemporaries found in her. One could readily imagine her taking a delight in what she once called "the sportingness" of it all. But she was too warm a person to remain unaffected by the disputes, especially within ber family, which ber movement created. For mental as well as physical reasons, she graw appropriately more and more accounts to the property of the second more and more accounts.

Again, her eldest daughter Christabel revealed all that frightening combination physical beauty with single-minded ruthlessness which led Mrs Pethick-Lawrence in the course of the dispute described in the fourth programme to cry out: "Speak to us as buman

"It's not a question of man relations", Christabel plied. "It'a a question of politics." There she stood, proafter programme, cross-questioning Mr gramme pertly cross-questioning Mr Lloyd George, smartly insulting Mr Asquith, supercilious always in the jaunty incline of ber head and in the autocratic fixedness of her tactical smiles—perpetually preening berself in her concern to make pared for their contam-poraries: They tacitly accepted the view that publicity constithe view that publicity constituted real progress.

Behind all six programmes was an implicit argument which goes something like this. The London-based women's movement languisbed until Mrs Pankhursr injected her provincial zest into it. By breaking up men's meetings, marching on Parliament and (latterly) by engaging in violence to others as well as to themselves—supas well as to themselves sup-portars of her Women's Social and Political Union revived tha and Political Union revived tha cause. Men, in their blinkared selfishness thought they could crush such a movement by brute force, bur of course failed to wear down the women's courage. And once war had demonstrated women's useful-vote in 1918. This argument contains an element of truth. Yet the suffragattes were by no means the only campaigners for woman suffrage. Apart from one brief

ness, the suffragettes were vin-dicated by the concession of tha organization with a much larger branch structure than Mrs. Pankhurst's, with far more political axperience and closer political connexions, and which (unlike Mrs Pankhurst's organization) bad nothing to lose by publishing its membership figures. Unfortunately for its subsequent reputation, the National Union was—like its leader Mrs Fawcett—eminently less televisable than Mrs Pankburst's Woman's Social and Political Union Yet it was far more important in winning votes for women than Shoulder to Shoulder evar suggested.

In the programmes, both police and politicians were shown time and again in a shown time and again in a brutal light. Yet they, too, bad a case—which, like that of the non-violent suffragists, was never stated. Violence, once embarked upon by reformers, tends to be contagious, both inside and outside the movement. If violence is good, the reformers argue, greater vioreformers argue, greater vio-lence must be better. Attention is thereby diverted from aims to mere means, and the authorities, in their counter-attacks, reinforce all the reformers' initial prejudices against them.

Furthermore, tactical violence from a minority of women always had an air of the the medium eventually became her sole message.

For all these things, this particular viewer was grateful. Yet, largaly because of its drametic purpose, Shoulder to This was a long-established to take sufficient account of the take sufficient accou

There was something despairing, though also prophatic, about Mrs Pankhurst's announcement in 1912 that "the argument of the broken pane is the most valuabla argument in modern politics". By August, 1914, her violent strategy was in fact leading nowhere, and it is perhaps fortunate for her reputation that at that point the First World War began. It was perhaps in the last episode that the programmes were at their most misleading.

When the vote was on the point of being won in 1917-18, Mrs Pankhurst's organization had been defunct for more than three years. But Mrs Fawcett's National Umon bad never disbanded, and enfranchisemenr owed much to the political tact it displayed at that moment. Shoulder to Shoulder, however, contented itself with shots of Sylvia Pankhurst in the East End and Mrs Pankhurst on the recruiting platform.

Finally, the series did not sufficiently emphasize the price which the suffragettes paid for Mrs Pankhurst's tactics. The obverse of the charismatic and courageous leadership whire the programmes ably portraye was the abandonment of antic parory structures within the suffragetts movement, and the pressed in 1911: "A woman caused Nurse Ellen Fiffield; putting up her fists at a man is a woman putting herself in tha one position which does not frighten bim." generation of an ethos which

The programmes also ignore those whose desire for parti-pation caused them to sece-from Mrs Pankhurst's organition into the Women's Freedo Leagne. This new body i mained small, and—by comp, ison with the other two organ zations—uninfinential.

Yet its democratic method which also inspired Mrs Fa cett's National Union, ackaon edged truths which Christal treated too lightly: That res lutions, unless carefully papared long in edvance and the full light of crinicism, w achieve little, and that vot unaccompanied by educari unaccompanied by education in its widest sense will redvance freedom. The imme are impact of tha vote women's postwar social sittion was very limited, but would have bean negligil without the patient and und matic committee work do by non-violent suffragists or several generations.

For it is harder wards the cost of administration to influence decisions when power centres become more distant, and in a larger unit it is barder to please all the people all the time. The size of the disaffected minorities is bound to increase. People have felt that some of those decisions—taken mainly for economic reasonshave threatened the very exist-ence of their communities, and the beech is roughened and scuffed as if the badgers bave been fighting or playing roughly there, and the mounds of light earth in front of the boles at at the entrances to their setts are often littered with bits of freshly gathered bracken and grass. The rest has presumably been carried down for bedding. They must change their litter several times a year for there are closs of dead leaves, brown and brittle fern, and faded grass among tha loose earth kicked out during spring cleaning, or an extension programme, in all the seasons. There is usually a scattering of badger bairs among ir all, coarse, crinkled and ringed with black and white.

At least four of the radiating paths lead to open glades whera bluebells and sparsely interspersed pignut plants grow. The edges are dug up showing the badgers' fondness for the bulbs and tuhers. The old routlings ere occasionally used as laurines; in spite of the fact thet other paths lead to barer-soiled places where small pits are specially dug and left uncovered.

Several obviously visible badger-ways lead down the slope towards the river where the ground flattens, and a few old hawthorns and massed bramble bushes grow among a sea of bracken and provide the territory for the last of the breeding redstarts in this district. eighteen and twenty-five, while support trails away among people of pensionable age. Alone of the parties SNP has a following which is evenly distributed between the major social classes. It has, in short, a good electoral profile. Furthermore, more than half its supporters are shown to prefer complete Scot-tish independence from the rest of Britain. It was not generally reckoned that so high e propor-tion of those voting for the SNP wanted its principal distinguish-able policy. The Scottish Tories interpret these and other portents to mean that the Scottish electorate is resolved to heve more of the decisions affecting Scotland taken in Scotland, preferably by Scotsmen. And they accept the common view that edministrative devolution ought to be matched by the development of political institutions. The form of assembly proposed this week by Mr Buchanan-Smith edheres closely to the recommendations of the party committee under the chairmanship of Sir Alec Douglas-Home which reported four years

The assembly would be empowered to debete all matters affecting Scotland including estimates; and it would have a considerable legislative role in conjunction with, and in sub-ordination to, Parliament. It would not, seemingly, give off a Scottish Executive. And—this is where the proposal differs from the Douglas-Home report-the assembly's members would be indirectly, not directly, elected, being drawn from among regional and district councillors.

This would be a weak form of political devolution compatible with the maintenance of the present scale of Scottish representation at Westminster and the present nature of the Secretary of State's office—both features of the system by which Scottish Tories set great store. It is, however, vulnerable to criticism from a variety of points of view: as being too little to satisfy the Scottish appetite for home rule, yet too much to resile from, and to look as if they therefore unstable; as being at the next election.

insufficiently democratic in not admitting direct election (it is objected that yet another set of elections would be excessive; but if excess there be, it is surely of tiers of government not of occasions for electing them); and as being too slight a transfer of euthority to make much impact on the substantive problems exercising Scotland

There was an alternative strategy open to the Scottish Tories. This would have been to go hard for administrative devolution-Mr Heath is expected to favour the transfer of much more of the Energy Department to Scotland when he speaks at Ayr today, and Sir William McEwan Younger, chairman of the party in Scotland, has espoused the idea of a Scotlish development corporation liberally financed by hypothecated revenue from North Sea oil (though neither of these party leaders himself regards thet sort of measure as sufficient). And, while going for administrative devolution, to reject political devolution as a needless compli-cation, injurious to an integrated economy, and a slippery slope on to which to propel the union of the two kingdoms. This might be described as the Willie Ross Mark position, and it at least has the merit of clarity.

There is some evidence permitting a conclusion—and The Scotsman's ORC poll is not the first to turn it up—that Scottish nationalism is largely a function of economic discontent. Oil, its prospects, and the suspicion thet the Scots may not reap enough of the benefits reinforce the economic basis of the Scottish desire for self-management. A generous deal on oil, more administrative decentralization, better evidence thet the Conservative Party in and out of Scotland knows what is needed for the improvement of Scotland's economic condition, and no truck with fancy constitutions. This might have been ground as favourable for counter-attack as that towards which the Scottish Tories are heading. It would certainly have provided the electors of Scotland with e choice which it is beginning to look as if they will not have generally could rouse rapidly rising expectations. In Africa elsewhere, and among black Rhodesian exiles, there would be reactions against undue concessions to the Smith regime, even if the Bishop makes them. The difficulty for the British Government is that it has no representatives in Rhodesia, and little capacity to weigh the becking for any party, faction, leeder or proposal. Yet if an agreement emerges, the next move is Britain'a. At least the Govern-

But what sort of an inquiry? The lesson of recent corruption stories on both sides of the Atlantic is thet partial disclosure is damaging for everyone concerned. All too often those under attack aeem to edopt the maxim: give a little and keep back a lot. The effect is to feed rumour and to poison the public mind. For their own good, as well as for the health of British politics, the Labour Party must avoid giving this impression in deciding whet form of inquiry to set up, assuming that they have the good sense not to reject the proposal

Case for keeping the CIR

From Mr Cyril Smith, Liberal MP for

Sir, I was certainly very pleased to see Professor Roberts' letter oo the Commission of Industrial Relations in your May 10 issue. There is 00 doubt that the Commission bas been treated sbahhily in the present scramble to repeal the 1971 Indus-scramble to repeal the 19/1 Industrial Relations Act.

While supporting the bulk of the repeal the Liberal Party has made it quite clear that it would like to see the CIR retained. In fact at a private meeting held with Mr Foot e few weeks ago I made that point very forcibly. Speaking in the Second Reading debate on tha Trade Union and Labour Relations Bill last week and Labour Relations Bill last week I said:

"The CIR has done some first-class work. I am sure that every fair-minded Member would want to pay minded Member would want to pay tribute to the excellent work done by Sir Leonard Neal and his col-leagues and staff. It is, in our view, a tragedy that their work is to cease and that the expertise which they have built up over the last five years should be so callously and lightly ditched."

The Commission has quite Commission The Commission has, quite wrongly, been tarred with the brush of the National Industrial Relations Court. It has become a target for trade union opposition and must, trade union opposition and must, tharefore, pay the penalty that the unions demand. Any sensible person knows that the Commission was set up in 1969 by a Labour Government 1 Its establiahment was a direct result of e recommendation by the Douovan Commission. The work of the CIR revolved eround recognition agreements and procedural agreements. ments and procedural agreements— a totally separate function from everyday conciliation and arbitration.

The Liberal Party believes that the CIR should be retained to continue its valuable work that it has been doing and that the projected concilia-tion and arbitration service should undertake the everyday tasks that its title implies. I shall, therefore, be tabling an amendment to retain the CIR for the parliamentary committee on the Bill. Yours faithfully, CYRIL SMITH, House of Commons. May 15.

Attitudes to wealth tax

From Sir Charles Mott-Radclyffe Sir, The result of the survey on the wealth tax made for The Times and published on May 13 suggests that if people ere asked starry eyed questions they are ept to give starry eyed replies. It is, for instance, quite meaningless to refer to incomes before tax in the context of "wealth". Very few people walk about with the latest tax code in their pocket; it is the take home packet that counts. According to the tax tables :

Take bome Earned income packet £3,325 £5,000 provides £10,000 £30,000 £50,000 £10,475 £13,905

Thus one third of the poll wbo, you report, regard the required level of income to qualify for "wealth" as lying between £5,000 and £10,000 a year are really referring to gross incomes of £10,000 and £70,000 Theorems of £10,000 and £30,000. These rates of tax alone would seem to constitute a wealth Your beadlines read "Poll tax shows that 72 per cent would back wealth tax on assets exceeding £75,000 °. Do these 72 per ceot realize that a farmer owning say, 130 acres—hardly e viable unit—or e shop keeper owning e tobacco and sweet shop in the high street of some country town heve assets worth something in excess of £75,000 ? Are they to be clohbered by wealth tax and how do they pay it except by selling part of their asset? I do not know bow you sell part of a shop, but if you sell part of e farm of 130 aggres, you reduce it me a totally 130 acres, you reduce it to e totally uneconomic size thereby depriving the farmer and his family of their living. Any individual, whether questioner or questioned, in an opinion poll who confuses "assets" (that can't he readily realized without disastrous results) with "cash" is unlikely to qualify for a wealth tax for very long. Yours faithfully,

CHARLES MOTT-RADCLYFFE, Barningham Hall, Norwich.

Violence in Middle East

From Mr Christopher Mayhew, Labour MP for Woolwich East Sir, On my last visit 10 the Middle East, in January, I denounced Pala-stinian terrorism at all my four press conferences and in both my television interviews. My remarks were widely quoted in the Arah press and will have heen approved. I am sure, by the great majority of the Arahs who read them.

How dare Mr Bernard Levin suggest, in his article today (May 17). that I would try to condone or excuse Maalot ?

The partisan defence of murder is indeed an abomination, whether the victims are Israel children children sleughtered in a school or Arab children sleughtered in a Lebanese refugee camp. But Mr Levin's article is vitiated by his omission from his long list of guilty persons. The Jewish record on violence in Palestine like the Arab record is Palestine, like the Arab record, is etrocious. Many examples could be given, past and present. Moreover, it can be argued that the people most obviously guilty of condoning murder are not, as Mr Levin suggests, the Americans who defend Calley or Manson, or the Irisbmen who defend the IRA killers, but any people, including the Israelis, who clamour for vengeance and violent retaila-tion as a justified answer to the violence they themselves condamn People who apply doublo standards o murder are, as Mr Levin sars, maggots who threaten to devour ociety". But let Mr Levin examine himself before making slanderous attacks on others.

And let Maalot lead all of us. including Mr Levin and invscif. to redouble our efforts to belp forward a peaceful settlement in the Middle

Attorney General and the judiciary

From Mr Mertin McLaren, Conservotive MP for Bristol, North-West

that there is e right to criticize members of the judiciary, and that it is his duty to project that right in Parliament and outside. Presumably be would wish to see his colleagues exercise the right in the prescribed way, upbill struggle though this may be for bim. The hooks of reference show that the conduct of judges cannot be debsted in Parliament save upon a substantial motion; members then bave notice of the attack to be made and a distinct vote of the Honse may be taken.

Yours faithfully, MARTIN McLAREN. House of Commons.

From Sir Hilary Scott

Sir, How depressing—and disquiet-ing—is the letter in your issue of May 16 from the Attorney General. He quotes an extract from his letter to Mr Mark Carlisle as follows:

"I hope than it is unnecessary for me to say that I wholeheartedly support the upholding of proper respect for the judiciary and agree that nothing should he said or done, in Parliament or elevators which in Parliament or elsewhere, which amounts to an unfair attack on Judges or undermines the authority of the judiciary or the rule of law." Unexceptionable sentiment, but the Unexceptionable sentiment, but the Attorney General then adds that it is his duty to protect the right to criticize members of the judiciary, in Parliament and outside, es being healthy both for the judiciary and for the administration of justice.

Air Foot, who holds an important ministerial office, referred in the House of Commons to Sir John Donaldson as baving a "trigger-happy judicial finger". Wheo invited to withdraw this observation he did not do so. The Attorney General appears to condone this derisive slur on one of her Majesty's Judges, presumably as being a criti-cism the right to make which he has a duty to protect—a strange way indeed of wholeheartedly upholding proper respect for the indiciary and sbowing concern for the health the administration of justice. This is more than a question of ill manners on the part of a Minister speaking in Parliament about some-one who cannot reply. It is an attack on a Judge who was carrying out his duty to administer the law. It is a law that Mr Foot does not like. It may be rapealed. So long as it is the law it should be upbeld by every-ooe, both in Parliament and ontside. Yours faithfully, HILARY SCOTT, Knowle House, Bisbops Walk,

From Mr Gerald Gordon Sir, It is unfortunate that the Attorney General in seeking to justify the comments of a Cabinet colleague has failed to draw the oiscontague has failed to draw the dis-tinction hetween, on the one hand, argued and reasoned disagreement with a judicial pronouncement (which has long heen acceptable) and on the other criticism amount-ing to political debating invective, unargued and (in the circumstances)

Problems of hospital workers extent that many of those who pre-fer to carry out the direct care of

From the Chairman of Brent and Harrons Area Health Authority
Sir, Your leading article of May 14 makes clear the urgency of e review of the rewards of nurses (and of many other categories of staff in the NHS). In particular, it indicates that their deplorable situation stems largely from their high ethical standards which inhibit the use of the strike weapon, and from the fact that, in the past, they have bad to that, in the past, they have bad to fight their own battles without much effective management support.

Since April 1, however, ao entirely new and potentially powerful ally of the nurses and other staff may have emerged. The new Area Health Authorities bave the statutory responsibility of planning and providing comprehensive health services in their areas and it is their forms. in their areas, and it is their dury to dispose of their resources—of money, of buildings and equipment, and, above all, of their dedicated staff—in such a way as to provide for the community the best possible balance of bealth care. In particular, it is clearly near of the community in the community is a contract of the community the best possible balance of bealth care. In particular, it is clearly near of the community the community the community the community the community the community the care of the community the communit it is clearly part of the management task of the new AHAs to take such steps as lie within their power to ensure that all the various categories of their staff are rewarded appropriately for the tasks in band.

of other staff directly involved in patient care, there can be little doubt that Area Health Authorities will give considerable support to their claims. First, AHAs will surely develop their own personnel policies so that, within national constraints, conditions and career prospects are made as attractive as possible, Second, AHAs are now in a position to exert pressure on central govern-ment, end on the Whitley machinery, to ensure that the pay and conditions for these groups of staffs are com-mensurate with the nature of their work, the extent of their responsi-hilities, and the degree of training required.

At the same time Area Health Authorities will no doubt be considering contingency plans for contracting the range of services they offer, at as to meintain the essential qualities of the NHS in the event of further losses of nursing staff. Neither the Government nor tha community as a whole should be un-eware of the possible consequences f any failure to give edequate recognition to the nursing profession.

BRYAN THWAITES, Kidderpore Avenue, NW3,

From Dr A. M. Bold and Dr D. R.

London Sir, One of the saddest lessons of the past few years is that patient and reasonable negotiation gain nothing that militant, sometimes imperient, action will not achieve more effectively. Hospital staff, traditionally imbued with such old-fashioned notions as responsibility and service, bave been slow to learn this. In consequence, nurses radiographers consequence, nurses, radiographers, technicians, porters, carpenters and many other workers in bospitals are paid a fraction of wbat they deserve for their skill, hard work and level of responsibility. Hospitals find it increasingly difficult to recruit staff, the strain on the rest gets worse the strain on the rest gets worse.

Since dedication to duty and responsible behaviour are so illrewarded, it is not surprising that industrial action in bospitals, unthinkable e little while ago, bas already occurred and more is threatened. Worse still, demoralization and despair are spreading and threatened. Worse still, demoraliza-tion and despair are spreading, and now it is ordinary people who are talking of withdrawing labour, what-ever the consequences. The results will be irreversible; there will not be the usual reports of lost produc-tion, that can be made up later, but of lost lives. We hope that tha Covernment diagnoses the serious Government diagnoses the seriousness of the malady, and treats it before it becomes incurable.

Anti-abortion campaign

May 16) why it is my opimon that, under e Labour Government with a comfortable majority, euthanasia would be legalized. I gladly explain. I base this opinion on what happened I base this opinion on what happened when abortion was legalized. The legalization of abortion was not Labour Party policy; on the other hand, the passing of a Private Memher's BiH, sponsored by a Liberal, Mr David Steel, legalizing it was facilitated by the Labour Government then in office. Otherwise, it would never have got onto the would never bave got onto the Statute Book.

Afterwards, I reflected that any Conservative or Lahour Government in office is bound to disappoint its militants, and therefore feels under an obligation to throw them an occasional hone. The difference an occasional bone. The difference between the two parties (pretty well the only one I can think of) is that the Tories throw a money bone-commercial television and radioand the Socialists a permissive one porn and ebortion, with euthanasie in the pipe line.

Mrs Short asks me if I will join ber in her "campaign for a proper family planning policy". Alas, no. #### Army in Northern Ireland

From Mr and Mrs Tony Firth Sir, "Bring the boys home from Ireland" is understandably a popular cry. It is not, bowever, a new one, having been implicit since at least the Home Rule controversy. The establishment of a stable Irish Protestant minority could take its place without the aid of British troops, or indeed any troops, has surely been the aim of British governmenta for over 50 years.

Of course, bad Westminster brought pressure to hear on Ulster Unionists in the postwar period, or had Unionism the wit or the will to take initiatives, or bad Dublin shaken off, long before it did, the blinkers of a bitter past, we would not be embroiled in the present tragedy. But we are now in a situation in which withdrawal of the only mediating force would provoke borror before it would provoke borror before it would provoke sense; a Kilkenny cars' solution.

It is fair to ask your well-in; entioned correspondents what better results British troops and recent British policy could have been pected to achieve, given the age and intransigence of the problems. No doubt the Irish are "impossible"; hnt can we really pretend they are not less impossible than under Carson? With a power-sharing executive and a Charter of Rights the rest of the United Kingdom might well envy?

Those who visit the Province as often as we, know that it continues to function; that real attempts at belated social justice are being made; that, most of all, those on hoth sides who seek moderation need time, support, and room to manocurre. It is hard to see any of these being given them by removing the Army. (Unless that Army he replaced by some other non-lrish one.)

non-Irish one.)
Even now, the vast majority of both populations remain non-violent and go about their ordinary husiness as best they can. The removal of our brave, harfied and patient soldiers—as sad victims of history as any Irishman—would at once mean that hoth communities would feel themselves compelled to mobilize. What then? then? ### Theologians and the faithful

From Dr Brenda C. Cross Sir, May I he one of the apparently few readers of your paper to express some sympathy with Professor Hanson? There is a gulf between ecademics on the one band and the faithful on the other, a pattern which shows up in such express processors. shows up in another area, namely the nation's schools.

Where it is alarming, in both areas, is when intelligeot people rejuse to have anything to do with a critical approach to the Bible and their own religious views. Too much water has passed under the bridge for us any longer to regard the Bible as something under a glass case which we thing under a glass case which we must not touch. At the same time, the ethic of Jesus still stands above all our quarrelling, and we must be bold and examine that teaching against its background and situation, and try to relate it to our own.

Part of the enigma of Jesus is that be bas kept the world thinking for two thousand years. The parables the Good Samaritan and the Prodigal Son may need little by way of academic interpretation, but they need the faithful to put them into operation. Perbaps bumility is needed on both sides. Yours sincerely. BRENDA CROSS,

Students and free speech From Mr Christopher Fisher

Sir, It may be of interest to know that Reading University Students' Union has now reversed and rejected the policies that allowed the meetings addressed by racist and fascist speakers to be disrupted. This is further support for the result. further support for the growing body of student opinion that helieves that the mistake of the NUS Conference at Easter in giving a licenca to thuggery in universities and colleges must be overturned.

There are, I would suggest, two essential reasons why the NUS policy must be reversed: first, by edopting methods that are as bad as those of the organizations that it wishes to oppose, the student hody becomes hittle hetter than those organizations; and secondly, by adopting the "heavy hoy" tactic, the authoritarian right wing is encouraged and its arguments are strengthened, and this is the exact opposite of the purpose of the NUS action.

However, students and society as whole must be vigilant in countaring the threat posed by the authoritarian extremism of both the right and the left. Racist and fasci heliafs must be exposed for s fraud that they are, and this mof better education and exchans of information so thet the proflearly our society can be more threat understood by everyone, not to from authoritarizms future, we swamp our society whity in which must create a corvibe legitimate it can be seen froups and indi-aspirations of all viduals can FISHER, CHRISTOPH, Reading University

What's wrong with Roman Catholic music?

By Colin Mawhy Master of Music,

Westminster Cathedral The recent liturgical reforms with-in the Roman Catholic Courch pre-sented musicians with a great opportunity. The prospect of found-ing a contemporary vernacular tradition should have inspired tradition should have inspired them to write mesic worthy of comparison with the past. However, ten years after the implementation of the reforms, Catholic church music remains in mentation of the reforms, Catholic church music remains in an anisansfactory state.

The reasons are complex: the deep involvement of so many fine musicians with traditional liturgical values; the economics of music publishing; the over-imphasis on congregational singling; the low morele of most thoirs and their inability to sing contemporary music; and the foolisaness of attempting to replace an unique and ancient heritage of music within the space of ten years. A dangerous situation has therefore arisen in which third-rate music is considered an acceptable accompaniment to worship. The Catholic Church, so long the discriminating patron of great art, is seen to be encouraging an unworthy musical culture; and is considered by many to he an institution which has no place for the real musician.

This situation cannot he accepted and it calls for a firm restatement of the importance of quality and transcendental value in religious music. Every-of liturgy, hur few are aware of the atrong practical reasons for encouraging fine contemporary composition and performance. These stem from the unusual interest which society now shows in music. This has largely come about through modern methods of communication and it will be stimulated by the present increase in leisure time. Music is fast becoming one of England's more important industries and it anyone doubts this, they should remember that in 1971 the Queen's Award for Industry went to the Performing Right Society—the organization which collects composers' performing toyalties. In the classical field, knowledge and appreciation are grow-ing rapidly. This is largely the result of an imaginative educaresult of an imaginative educational policy allied to the extensive influence of broadcasting and recording. The number of nightly concerts in London is extraordinary, ranging from modern ballet at Sadlers Wells to the regular performance of Renzissance church music.

Standards are very high and the contrast with many church performances is shattering. Religious compositions which are sung with great artistry in the sung with great artistry in the liturgy.

concert hall are rarely heard in There is considerable quality our charches, and when they are, the singing is often of poor quality.

In a largely materialistic age, it is a matter of great importance as to how the Church presents herself, and one method is sorely through the excellence of her culture. It is wrong that Almighty God, the creator of heavily, should be worshipped with music which in many cases would be laughed off the concert platform. As musical appreciation grows, it will also hecome an increasing drawback to the work of crangelization. The problem will not be solved by a complete return to the music of previous ages. This has a very important place, but it must be balanced with compo-sitions of the present time. So many people assume that great art is only produced by dead men; this attitude is largely responsible for the dearth of contemporary Carholic music. It is important to remember that the Church achieved the repuhacause she employed and encouraged living artists. Modern music is certainly experiencing a period of turmoil and it is difficult to see how some of it can be fitted into worship, but an attempt must be made to adapt the hest for use in

in some contemporary music and a number of living composers are men of great vision and originality. These men will not be tempted to compose for the liturgy while their work is con-sidered by many to be mere cacopbony. It sometimes appears that the Church is only prepared that the Church is only mephetic to accept medern music when it is strummed, usually hadly, on amplified guitars. This must be remedied if religion is to take any part in musical development. The current difficulties in modern music are partly caused by a lack of any coherent musical philosophy. This will not change until creative artists can again see that Christianity offers them a positive intellectual approach to their work. The first step towards reestablishing past standards is to insist upon an international cathedral tradition within the Catholic Church where musical quality is accepted as an essential feature of worship. An important element of this tradition must be the patronage of contemporary composers so that new religious music can have considerable cultural importance. Performance must be of sufficient stature to be worthy, in human terms, of the worship of Almightly God. The unfortu-nate dichotomy hetween musical hearty and helief must be overcome so that music may once again be fertilized by real religious conviction.

It is the recall of Lorimer to attack. A me retain of hornmer to attack. A goal scorer with Leeds United. A badly needs to be on target in a side that has been in sere need of striking power up front.

Perhaps Lorimer, the tall Jordan (good in the air) and Ford can work it out between themselves. But when it comes to the World Cup what they must realize is that the game will be played en the ground where the best football has always taken place.

Meanwhile at Wrexham (kickoff 7.30), with neither side fully settled, Wales, prospective wooden-spoonists, take on Northern Ireland in the forgotten fixture of the home championship. Furthermore the timing of this match remains n sore point.
As Rice, the Irish right back, said:
"Most of the Inverest and build up is centred around the EnglandScotland game, and as that is being televised live a lot of fans who might otherwise have come along to see us, will stay away. But you to see us, will stay away. But you can't really blame them. I would suggest playing our match on the Friday might—as an appetizer." Yet curiously should both Northern Ireland and Scotland win, then Wrexham will have produced one of the sides in a triple tie for the British title.

The Northern Ireland team will not be picked until today.

Since then this once valeed reward has become "chicken feed" to top class professionals able to cemmand salaries exceeding £5,000 and even £10,000 a year. The committee's view is that such bonneses should now be written into a player's contract, as are a variety of other incentives. The executive propose that all players' shirts shall, be clearly numbered 1 to 12 with no change of numbers during a match. There had been instances in the hurry of South American side's World Cup warm up tour bere tomorrow.

Argentina are also missing some top players still involved in European club championships, but they may be reinforced by Angel Baras, a leading player in the French Nantes team which is challenging hard for the Prench title. Fresh from a 0—0 draw with Granada in Spain, Argentina will hope to blend an understandling between their players.

Although six players from the French side that earnt an excellent draw with Czechoslovakia in Prague two weeks ago are injured, the French should still be a determined team. The main French weakness could be in midfield, where the absence of the Nantes captain. LORD'S: Middlesex (6 pts) drcw with Nottinghamshire (6).

Although nobody won, it was a good match, no doubt giving more satisfaction to Notringhamshire than Middleser. On this evidence, Bond is beginning to get his new side together.

Nottinghamshire declared with five second innings wickets down, giving Middlesex four hours to score 277. Harris reached his cen-tury, and Pullan usefully extended his nightwarthman's jeh. It was a reasenable declaration, keeping both sides in the game. The pitch was again dusty and unreliable, but too slew to put batsmen into exceptional difficulty.

best score of his career

Frank Hayes, Lancashire's Test baisman, stole most of the limelight in the drawn match against the Indian touring team vesterday at Old Trafford. Hayes made 187 in 292 minutes, including 25 fours and two sixes, the best score of his career. Lancashire made $11, hut the docile wicket gave little or no help to howlers throughout with Bedi's five for 120 the best. The Indians supported this contention by reaching 187 for ne wicket in their three-heur stint at the wicket. Gataskar (104) hit 17 fours. Solkar was 65 not out at the close.

Sussex salvaged a little hoeour from their sixth defeat of the season by getting to within 40 runs of the target after being set 344 to win by Northamptonshire at Hove. Greig (70) aget Faber (51) gave them hope with a sixth wicket partnership ef 111 in even time. They stayed together until the scere reached 263 and then Greig called Faber for a run to cover and Faber was run eut when Watts hit the stumps with an undersom throws. Total:

Brook and El Pastro have been sent en a mission of plender from Italy and France respectively. In an extense to ward off what is undowheadly a sharp two-pronged challenge from abroad, we are fielding a ream of seven headed by Owen Dedley and Boldbor.

There is ground for thinking that Owen Dudley can been this prize at home, but I expect his principal truls to make life difficult for him. rivals to make life difficult for him. Noul Marless was particularly ricased to see Owen Dudley win rleased to see Oven Dudley win the Earl of Sefton Stakes at New-market as easily as he did, because his training had been interrupted 15 days before when he trod on a bint and bruised a foot. and Fuooy Fellow dead heated with Indor Rhythm at Saodown Park. All in all, they have given great backing to Oweo Dudley's training since his race has gone unioterrupted and his race has gone unioterrupted and yesterday our Newmarket Correspondent said that he has been moving like a good horse that Alorless has always believed him to be. Oweo Dudley is preferred to Boldboy, who won the Greenham Stakes here just over a year ago, in the belief that six or saven furious suit Boldboy ideally hut that a mile is just out of his reach. Boldboy excelled racing over the shorter distances last year, and although he ran well in the Prix Jacques Le Marois, his one attempt at a mile so far, he was not a danger in the eighth and last furlong. Just what a good performance that was became clear only when Brook ran away with the Hungerford Stakes here last August. Brook was being trained at the time by Peter Walwyn, but he returned home to Italy in the autumn to be trained again by his original master, M Benetti, in whose care be remains. Brook resumed his winning ways in Milan this spring. El Rastro defeated Rose Laurei straight into my notebook after I had watched him finish third at Newmarket behind Rubric and Quisical. By the time The Guynor is saddled, Quisical may well bave won the Manton Stakes.

Three haodicaps complete the programme. Traitor missed his race at York on Wednesday because his connexions thought the ground was too firm. I fancied Neither Pitskelly oor Confusion has run this seasoo. Last spring they finished first god second in cause his connexions thought the ground was too firm. I fancied him there and it coes against the grain too to give him a second chaoce in the London Gold Cup.

The finish of the Winchester Stakes ought to concern Palm Track, who won this race 12 months ago, Silleys Maid, and Plummer, who finished seventh bebind Palm Track last year. Plummet is preferred this time.

Bigribo, even with his penalty, will surely give his hackers a good run in the Kenneth Robertson Stakes, but how can one oppose Royal Quarter, who finished third in the Chester Vase? He has only 7 st 9 lb to carry today. In a month's time he may well be asked to give weight to a number of his rivals today, not receive weight from them. the Tote Free Handicap. Pitskelly went on to win the Jersey Stakes at Royal Ascot, but he finished he-hiod Owen Dudley in the 2,000 Guineas.

Coup de Feu carried 9 st 11 lb when he won the Spriog Cup bere on April 20. Stout effort though that was, he was dealing with horses of a different class that day compared with those he meets now. Maestro Please, the only three-year-old introold enough to take year-old introold enough to take on his elders, timished seventh in the 2,000 Guineas a fortuight ago. # Nonoalco in Derby

From Pierre Guillot French Racing Correspondent

Paris, May 17 Paris, May 17

Mr Daniel Wildenspain has released Yves Saint-Martin to ride Noncalco in the Derby at Epsom oo June 5, even if he has a runner in the race-himself. Mr Wildenstein said he had agreed that Saint-Martin, who won the 2,000 Guineas on Noncalco, should ride Mrs Maria Felix-Berger's colt at Epsom, if he runs there. No firm decision will be taken about decision will be taken about Nonoalco coming to Epsom until the stable has had an opportunity to assess the performance of Cellin io the Irisb 2,000 Guineas tomorrow, but it seems likely that tomorrow, but it seems likely that he will run in the Derby.
All the better for his run in the Poule d'Essai des Poulins, where he finished second to Monlines, Mississiptan should win the £45,455 Prix Lupin, at Long-champ on Sunday. A victory in this strongly contested race would entitle Mr Nelson Bunker Hunt's colt to dispute Derby favouritism entitle Mr Nelson Burker Hunt's colt to dispute Derby favouritism with Giacometti. Mississiplan was held up in his work in early April, after being knocked down by a loose horse on the gallop. His return was delayed until the Poule d'Essai, on April 28. He rook the lead entering the straight, but was unable to resist the challenge of Moulines on the beavy ground and was heaten half a length.

Mississiplan should gain his revenge on Sunday. The extra two Mississiplan should gain his revenge on Sunday. The extra two and a half furlongs will suit him much better than Moulines who is hy Cashmir II. Stronger opposition should come from Dankaro, D'Arras, Schoeller and Riverton. Dankaro has won his two races this year, the Prix Greffulhe and Daru each worth more than $20,000. In the Prix Daru be beat Sean and Kervic who runs again. Sean, and Kervic who runs again. D'Arras who won the Prix Noailles on April 28, was not intended to run again before the Prix dn Jockey-club. His trainer Jean Pierre Ippen changed his mind because he has no horse of sufficient class to work with D'Arras and the colt is growing lazy.

Schoeller like Dankaro is unheaten in two races this year, they were not of the same standard. Riverton started favourite for the Poule d'Essai des Poulins, but finished last but one. Tomogrow's distance will suit him much better than the mile of the Poulins, but it was rumoured after that race that he has respiratory troubles and he must be treated with caution.

There are three English-trained

There are three English-trained challengers for the Prix de Saint Georges. Singing Bede has already beaten Silver God twice this season at Kempton Park and Newmarket and Constans once, at Bpsom. The altered weight gives Constans, who won this event last year, a good chance of revenge. The only serious home representative is Moubariz, winner of three of his eight races as a two-year-old. Fourth and second in top class all-aged company last October, be can keep the prize at home.

Third to Moulines and Mississip-ian, Sir Christopher Soames's Contrahand has an excellent chance of victory in the £10,909 Prix de la Jonchere. He has most to fear from Bayraan who was-about two lengths behind him in sixth place in the Poulins. The English-trained Hector looks a little ontclassed.

English-trained Hector. looks a little ontrlassed.

Several of Highchere's likely rivals for the Prix de Diane meet in the £9.091 Prix Cleopatre at St. Cloud today. Jeanne de Rethel is reputed to be François Mathet's best filly. A daughter of Luthier she won ber only race but may meet her match in Sciure, a Seathful filly, who easily won the one mile Prix Pirette on this course on April 22.

David Broome on Ballywillwill, who was in the water, and young Timothy Grubb on Marie Celeste were dispating the lead on four faults, with each rider restricted to a single borse, before Caroline Bradley proved the course manageable, to the relief of its architect, Major Whitehead, with a clear round on True Lass. The Troilus mare's dam is still pulling a farm cart close to Trevor Banks's bome in Yorkshire.

Miss Bradley was lated joined by Newberry on Warwick and finally by Frederick Broome, the world champion's younger brother, on Wenlock Wolf, winner of the Calor Gas trophy at the last Horse of the Year Show. On Evan Jones, Smith had rolled a pole off the fifth fence. Pennwood Forgemill, with Paddy McMahon, dropped a hind toe on the last, having lost his impulsion going into it.

Drawn first in the final, Wenlock Wolf came close to falling at the last part of the treble, and although he made a good recovery, he had a later fence down to total eight faults. True Lass stopped at the wall, for three, but Warwick streaked to a second clear round for a popular local victory. #### Cellini must repel home and foreign rivals

From Our Irish Racing Correspondent Dublin, May 17

Barriog heavy overnight rain conditions underloot for today's Guineas meeting at the Curregh should be ideal, and Vinceut O'Brico is confident that Cellinican succeed in the Irish 2,000 Guineas, where his brother in blood, Apalachee, was such a disappointment in the Newmarket Guineas. juineas. Cellini, the mount of Lester Pig-gott, goes into action with an un-beaten record to five appearances. Last year be easily defeated Pitcairn by two lengths and a half in ceirn by two lengths and a half in the Parthurst Saries or the amarket, and this scores he held off Furry Glen in a photo-firish to the Yauxhall Trial at Phoenix Park. He then snuar put half to the challenge of Red Abert in the Tetrarch to be at the Curragh. Some critics feel that his two wins this year have lacked the sparkle shown by him in 1973, but until he is beaten it would be dangerous to be overcritical.

it would be dangerous to be overcritical.

We shall certainly get a good life to his progress own the winter as Juho Duning is opposing him again with Pitcalen. This seas of Petingo light raced once only this season, and was a deviate large sule length

Of the outsiders, by far the most attractive is Haunt, who was bottled up throughout the final quarter mile of the Tetrarch Stakes; otherwise be would probably have been a good second to Cellini. He, too, provides a useful tie-up with English form, for his best effort last season was his fourth to Giacometti in the Cimerack Stakes at York.

To sum up, Cellini must not only confirm previous superiority over his home-trained rivals, hut decision as one of the leaders in the antepost market on the Derby.

The Irish 1,000 Guineas, which will he decided 65 minutes earlier. Is a far more open contest, and here, too, there is a strong sprinking of English-trained contenders, including the strong sprinking of English-trained contenders, including the strong of fitness.

Eldin unseated twice by eventual winner

Douglas Smith, the Newmarket trainer, completed a dooble at Thirsk yesterday, but not before Darling Point had caused confusion in the Elmire Maiden Plate. The filly headed the opening market exchanges at 6 to 4, out, after unseating Eric Eldin and bolting npon leaving the paddock and again unseating Eldin at the start, her supporters deserted her and at the start she was only 3 to 1 joint favourite. favourite.

The filly won her race, but it was a desperately close thing. She ran green and only just managed to bold off the 10 to 1 chance, Sky Bonnet, by a head. The double was completed in the Cariton Mimott Plate with Honey-blest, who gave Eldin no difficulties apart from a slight tendency to hang in the closing stages.

John Slade, who paid 3.500 guineas for this, his first horse, said: "Honeyblest was declared to run of Newmarket but developed an abscess and was taken out of the race, which we thought be would win. We have no definite plans for him but he may run at Sam Hall, whose stable did not

Som Hall, whose stable did not see going until the back end of last seeson, has made a good start this year. His Dakota got the hetter of a hard stroggle with Fool's Mate in the Gordoo Foster Stakes.

In the straight the race was hetween these two. Dakota edged ahead and held on to win by a bead. Dakota was bred by his owner, Guy Reed, at his stud near Harrogate, and is a half brother to Warpath. The Helmsley Stakes went to

The 3 per cent rise in the schilling's value, in terms of the mark, corresponds to a change from 7.42 to 7.20 schillings. West Germany is Austric's main reading nature.

The schilling will continue to be held broadly in step with the joint float currencies. The main point of Austria's move, according to National Bank officials, was to counter inflation and keep it below the general European level.

Trading on the currency markets was thinner yesterday with few operators prepared to deal ahead of Sunday's meeting of those finance ministers whose countries remain within the joint float (often referred the joint float (often referred to on the exchanges as the "mark block") and there has already been a denial that it will be other than routine. Mrs Barbara Castle, the Secretary of State for Health and Social Services, is emerging as a champion of women's rights. The inequality of henefits for women in the State Reserve Pension scheme was one of the main reasons for her decision not to let this part of the Social Security Act, 1973, proceed.

There is another area, very much within her jurisdiction, to which she could also turn her attention. This is the discrepancy between the short-term social security benefits paid to single and married women respectively—despite the fact that both pay identical contributions.

A married weman, of course, bas the option of paying the reduced 4p national insurance contribution and telving on ber husband's contributions to provide for tetirement pension. On the other hand, there are many married women who prefer to pay tha full stamp-currectly 71p or 79p, depending on whether or not she is contracted out of the state graduated pension schemebasically to enjoy maternity benefits. Single women pay the same 71n or 79p.

However, when it comes to receiving the short-term benefitssickness and unemployment payments—the singla woman will teceive £7.35 a week while the married woman has to make do with £5.15 a week. The official explanation for this discrepancy is that married women have hushands to support them during periods of ill-health or unemployment. And if a married woman is the principal breadwinner in the family, she will be given the larzer henetit.

But, apart from the fact that this traditional notion of the man being the primary provider for the family is steadily losing ground-both in respect of actual income as well as public attitudes-there is the other consideration. Why should married women pay as much in national insurance contributions as single women—and receive less for it?

New 'protection' difficulties over loans for policyholders

part of their service to give leans to existing policy holders at modest rates of interest. But the Consumer Credit Bill and other factors are likely to make horrowing in this way more difficult and more expansive.

Normally, a life office will provide a loan up to a high proportion of the current surrender value of a policy-although thia facility is by no means always available with regular premium unit-linked policies.

Generally, anyone wanting to borrow in this way will receive the cash within, say, a waek or a fortnight (depending on the degree of authority which the particular branch bappens to bave) after banding over the policy, provided there are no charges on it.

The granting of a loan bas been a fairly straightforward procedure. But this type of loan will now get caught up in the protection "given to horrowera and, in many ways, policy bolders who want to horrow money will be worse off than in the past.

For a start, there will be much more delay. A prospective borrower will bave to be sbown copies of the agreemant in advance. Furthermore, there will be a seven-day . " cooling-off "

In other words, the borrowet will be able to withdraw within seven days of signing the agreement. This means that be will not actually get the money until a week after he signs—which will be particularly hard on those horrowers who need the money in a burry and who are fully aware that their insurance company is charging a very fair rate of interest.

The insurance companies will be involved in very much more administrative work than in the past—providing copies of agree-ments in advance, and heing presently depressed capital obliged on request to give very markets, unless interest tates fae of 15p).

Somehody will have to pay for this extra administrative work, and it is quite possible that it will he the policy bolders themselves-in the form of higher interest rates, or in some other

Some life offices are already admitting in private that not only will the interest rate charged rise sbarply, but that they might also bave to re-consider their attituda to loans: Although it is unlikely that loans will he stopped altogether companies could drop all reference to them in their sales literature and promotions in an attempt to kill off demand this

It can be argued that, at present, with profit policy hol-ders as a budy are subsidizing those who take loans on their policies—since it would be mora profitable, in terms of interest charged and administrative work involved, for the com-panies to lend their funds in

Should the extra administra-tive costs as a result of the new legislation be a further drain on profitability (which will be met mainly by the with-profit policy bolders), or should those borrowing the money pay for the extra axpenses incurred? That is something for the insurance companies to ronsider. Certainly, they will be only too well aware of the difficulty of earning reasonable profits at the present time in view of the investment conditions and the way in which the values of equity portfolios bave dropped.

Traditional life offices are always most reluctant to reduce their rates of bonus, since this is something which may be held against them for years after-wards. It could be quite serious from the point of view of future

Nevertheless, there have been warnings from some quarters over the past few weeks that the maintenance of current rates of

For years, life assurance com- full details about the stata of abould rise to even higher levels have a worthwhile surrender panies have looked upon it as the loan (for a ludicrously low to compensate for any further value and thus be suitable for depreciation.

Thus life offices cannot be levels, and may well not want from them. Certainly, there has been a hardening attitude on the part of insurers.

Now, for a reasonable sized loan, many offices are charging 10 per cant, or more: Admit-tedly, it can be argued that this is a lower rate than they could obtain elsewhere (and smaller, parcels of cash are involved), but, of course, the security cannot be bettered. All the indications are that life will become more difficult for those wishing to borrow from life offices against the surrender value of their policies.

Of course, if one bas a policy with a surrender value, one is not obliged to borrow from the not obliged to borrow from the insuranca company in question. It is simply that the company bas generally been the cheapest source, and it has not blown hot and cold as the economic climate bas changed. But a bank which is willing to lend should accept a policy as security.

Currently, of course, its interest rate is likely to be higher than that charged by an insurance company.

There is a good deal of un-certainty in the air since the Budget about straightforward policy loans taken against the surrender value of regular premium policies. And, because the facts are so thin on the ground, insurance men bold differing views.

Some points, bowever, are reasonably clear. In the first place, there is the disallowance of tax relief on interest payments. For loans in force at Budget Day, the interest will continue to be eligible for tax relief until April 5, 1980.

Loans can be obtained in tha same way as in the past for policies which were in force on March 26, and the policies will not be affected by the new proposals. But, of course, no tax relief will be allowed on the interest payments for fresh loans. For some years, only policies arranged before Budget Day will loan purposes.

There is a strong body of opinion which feels that the proposals intend that if a loan is obtained against the security of a regular premium policy arranged after Budget Day, there will be no tax drawbacks.

While it can be argued that the policy holder is paying premiums with one hand (and obtaining some tax relief in respect of them) while receiving "benefits" in the form of the loan, with the other band, be will be paying a commercial rate of interest, and be will not be ob-taining any tax relief on that. From the insurance company a point of view, the position will be much the same as if the money had been lent to any other individual or organization, quite unconnected with the policy.

There are those whn look on the gloomy side (and perhaps read more into the Inland Revenue's notes on the subject than is intended), by saying that, than is intended), by saying man, if a loan is taken instead of surrendering a policy, there may be a claw-back of tax relief on the same basis as if the policy bad been surrendered.

While, no doubt, the life offices could put that into opera-tion, the position could become much more complex if a nolicy bolder were to obtain a loan from his bank against the surrender value of his policy.

Others among those taking a gloomy view are thinking in terms of a charge to higher rate tax if a loan is obtained within tha first 10 years of the life of a policy (or three quarters of its term, if less)—again, on the same basis as if the policy had been surrendered.

To be absolutely clear on these points, we shall bave to wait until the Finance Bill nramised for the autumn. Mean-while, for policies in force before Budget Day, there should not be tax difficulties (apart from the disallowance of interest for tax relief), but there is the real possibility of life offices becoming less "generous" to their policy

The other day I had a bad trip. I don't know whether it was the hallucinogenic mushroom omelette I had for lunch at the Club or the extra glass of madeira afterwards, but the fact remains that, slumped at my desk at about half past three in the afternoon I suddenly discovered myself in this four-dimensional time twist, being wrung out as it were by a terrible

And in the medium term, tha And in the medium term, that ourses' pay claim is a reminder that inflation remains a major problem. On the world stage, last week's renewed clash in t'e Middle East should be a warning that Europe's oil supplies cannot yet be taken for granted.

As inflation-proof stocks there should, in theory, be few to match the major insurance brokers. Turnover and profits, so the argument goes, are both related to the level of insurance premiums worldwida and these as a result of progressive inflation, the devaluation of the pound and natural growth, have been rising fast.

None of which has stopped the shares from taking heavy falls in the past month or so. The shares of most of the marker leaders. Minet, C. E. Heath, Matthews Wrightson, Sedgwick Forbes, Stenhoose, Leslie & Godwin and Hogg Robinson. win and Hogg Robinson—are now close to their 1973/74 lows.

However, there is one explana-tion for this. Stock market ex-pectations from the brokers have been very high and although the 1973 figures to have been an-

in equities daily trading is nounced recently have been by barely one sixth of bull market no means poor, they have been levels underlines the causion almost uniformly below best exthat interest rates were likely to fall as the year progressed, thus cutting back on the investment income derived from deploying premium income in the money pectations.

Thus, while Sedgwick Forbes. for example, turned in a 17 per cant increase in profits to £8.34m, this was nevertheless around £500.000 below estimetes. Leslie & Godwin was even more disappointing with an iocrease of less than £100,000 to £2.86m, while Minet was perbaps £250,000 under market earnings targets despite a pretax gaio from £3.1m to £4.5m.

tax gaio from E3.Im to E4.5m.

Moreover, as my chart shows, the brokers had comfortably outperformed the market average in the early part of this year, falling by only 8 per cent against 21 per cent by the FT All-Share iodex up to the end of March, belped by a bullish stockbroker's analysis from Sheppards and Chase. So a 4 per cent fall in the sector, compared to fall in the sector, compared to en 8 per cent rise in the All-Share index since the beginning of April might well be seen as oothing more than a loog over-due market shakeout.

The fundamentals have out changed, however, and if the arguments in favour of the sector have any validity a shakeout oo this scale uffers at least selective investment opportunities. On the most conservative set of assumptions, Sheppards and Chase, back in January, were looking for a 12 per cent growth in brokers' profits during 1974.

But this was on the assumption

International diversification.

International diversification.

The private investor seeking to construct a well-diversified equity portfolio aiming at long-term capital growth need look no further than Scotfunds. While maintaining a UK base, Scotfunds has the flexibility to invest in overseas markets (currently over 60%) and provides a widely-spread portfolio

One straightforward investment not only covers most of the world's major stock markets; it also releases the private investor from the need to attend personally to all the currency complications and time-consuming research inevitably associated with international investment.

The aim of Scotfunds is long-term growth of capital the aim of Scottums is long-term grown of capture through international investment. As can be seen, the investment policy is highly selective. The portfolio is concentrated in a relatively small number of stocks, these being continuously monitored for their growth potential.

Management charges. The minimum level for a first investment in Scotfunds is

£1,000. This enables the managers to set the initial management charge at a level which is considerably lower than normal.

This is currently 12% on the first £5,000 invested, reducing to 1% for amounts over £5,000, and to 1% on the whole deal for amounts over £25,000. In addition, a half-yearly charge currently of 25p

£100 of the value of the fund plus a sum (currently 2-5p) to cover V.A.T. is taken out of the trust's assets (see Charges). These charges cover the full-time services of professional investment managers who are backed by an in-house research department, and who have at their disposal multi-currency loan facilities which can mitigate the effects of fluctuations in the investment currency premium and exchange rates.

Capital gains tax.

As a unit trust, Scotfunds represents an edvantageous investment medium compared with a privately managed portfolio. Scotfunds pays capital gains tax on switching investments at a flat rate of 15% compared with the shareholder, who pays between 16½% and 30%.

Moreover, when a unitholder disposes of his units at a gain he is entitled to a credit of 161% to be set against his own liability on that gain.

This means that those paying tax at the higher rates will effectively postpone a proportion of the full capital gains tax liability until they dispose of their units, and then their personal liability will be reduced.

Basic rate taxpayers will have a nil capital gains tax liability when they sell their units.

Performance.

Scotfunds was launched on 7th November 1967 with a unit offer price of 100p. £1,000 invested then had appreciated to £2,018 by 15th May 1974, a rise of 101-8%. This compares with a rise of 3-1% in the Financial Times Actuaries All-Share Index and a fall of 3-2% in the Financial Times.

Investment Trust Index over the corresponding period.

The events of recent months, where a number of world markets have been relatively depressed, highlight bow equity investments can fluctuate in value. It is important therefore to remember that while a diversified international portfolio offers prospects of long-term capital growth there are likely to be periods when individual world markets fall and accordingly these will be reflected in the short-term performance

Remember, the price of units and the income from them may go down as well as up. You should regard your investment as a long-term one.

HOW TO INVEST IN SCOTFUNDS.

Lump-sum investment from £1,000. You can either place your order through your professional adviser, or you can telephone your order at any time during office hours through 01-554 2237 and send in your remittance later. # Wall St final upset for equities

Investment confidence was unsembled yesterday by a bost of at 233p ahead of Monday's restrict port on first quarter trading. Unilever (303p), and Beechams of the rescue attempt (221p) shaded lower at the at Lyon Group. Io the end, it was the downturn on Wall Street which proved the unioing of the equity marker, where share prices abandoned a promising rally to close at the day's lowest levels. However, the chief feature of equities remained the low level of turnover.

The market opened with widespread losses after the disclosure that the Lyon rescue moves had rua into trouble. While Lyco is in unquoted compacy, its prob-lems bave clear implications for the property and banking sectors. The FT 300 level came under attack after one hour of trading, although selling re-mained light.

Later, a cautious recovery was made and at 3.30 pm when dealers left the House to deal from their offices, the picture as improving.
But the market's nervousness was displayed by the readiness with which share prices weakened on news that Wall Street was falling back. The FT index closed 3.5 down at 300.8, and The Times index 0.96 off at 119.48. The "bammering" of a small broking firm, which stopped trading earlier in the week was discovered theirs. week, was disregarded, being caused by technical rather than financial factors.

The property aector was badly rattled by developments at Lyon Group. Nervous selling hit many leaders, and although the tone steadied later, falls in British Land (58p), Metropolitan Estates (125p) and Regional Properties "A" (45p) ranges to Disappointing results lowered Town & Commercial to Oil shares, already unsettled by the flare-up in the Middle East, proved vulnerable again to selling from Wall Street sources during late dealings in London.

But gold shares were buoyed up by the higher bullion price and also by the usual, if cynical speculation, that rumours of wars mean increased demand for the metal.

The Monopoly Commission's rejection of the planned Boots/
Fraser merger brought activity in the shares—Boots rising 7p to 190p. while House of Fraser edged forward to 84p, hoping that the United States Broad-way Hale, the United States group, might now buy more of Fraser.

On the same pitch. Burton shares fell back oo highly disappointing profits. Other store and food shares looked dull. With Associated Food now a counter bidder to Gateway Securities, ahares in Upward & Rich touched Sip. Takenver rumours lifted Newman Tonks while Ault and Wiborg settled at 32p on the increased staka taken by Sun Chemical Corporation of the Uoited States.

In a dull banking sector, Keyser Ullmann fell to 120p on their involvement with Lyon, aod also a press attack. Cater Ryder continued to lose ground.

Gilts were much quieter than of late, with the more subdued tone noticed on Thursday afternote continuing. It is not vet clear if the market is pausing for breath or if it is now stabilizing at present levels.

"Shorts" opened 1/16 point easier. Selling then developed, and although not beavy, con-

most stocks closing at the lowest. In the shorter shorts losses were confined to 1:16 point, but in the medium and longer-shorts hey often amounted to 1 or 1

Most medium-dated stocks were oochanged, but "loogs" were rather dull. After opening or 4 point down they stayed at hese levels all day, with oo fluctuations and not a great deal of business.

Indicative price for sisal boosted

Indicative prices for sisal have been raised sharply by the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO). The price for the current seasoo bas been put at $500 a metric too, plus or minus $75, for the benchmark grade of East African rejects, Cost-insurance-freight Enrope. #### Ouicksilver producers to set-up association

Algiers, May 17.—Major ouick-silver producers have decided to set up a formal producers' associ-ation and to unilaterally fix a price for the metal. The decision was taken at a two-day meeting here of seven countries which together produce some 95 per cent of world quicksilver exports.—Reuter.

Compleat Angler Hotel

A luxurions botel on the site of the 17th century inn, where Izaak Wallon wrote his masterpiece, from which the hotel takes its name. The Thames, at the bottom of the gardens, will have changed little since he knew it. A long-established tradition of comfort and excellent service abounds. All rooms with bath and telephone.

Plus the wonderfully situated Valzisan Restaurant, from which the whole tree-lined reach can be seen. An extensive international à la carte meou & table d'hôle, is complemented by an excellent reasonably priced wine list.

FOR SALE AND WANTED SAM McGREDY HAS A NAME TO CHERISH

I have one new rose to be markened in 1976 in the U.K. 1975 in the nest of the world.

The rose, under code name. MACSYE 6920 NZ is by far the most brilliam of my new hand-painted series. It's not a Phybrid Ita. nor is it. a. factburnta. I would call it a sure a brown with the most dazzing startet, absolutely single and perfect blooms. In the centre of each bloom is a distinct and large creamy vellow eve. The colour holds perfectly, the old penils door cleanly.

There is nothing even remotedy like it, in the Rose World.

The name is for sale, for you,
